Gentlemen, do not come here and talk any humbug about "trusts" if you are prepared to set one of that kind upon its feet by your action here to-day. There is an incipient trust. This company does not control the entire pneumatic-tube service now, because there is another great company in Philadelphia, the Batchelder Company, which controls the other part. But suppose they get these contracts all over the country, how long will it be before there will be a single company that will get every bit of its sustenance from appropriations made by the representatives of the people?

It is the Bell Telephone theory over again, a great manufacturing company that does not operate a telephone; but there is a telephone system in every city and town throughout the country, these telephones being controlled in each instance by a local company which operates the telephone system. The Bell Company is interested in all of them and controls all of them. It is a monopoly, as it has to be under the circumstances, for that particular kind of service.

Here is what is being done: There is a local company in Chicago; there is a local company in St. Louis, I doubt not; there is a local company in Boston and in Philadelphia and in New York. These local companies are being gotten up all over the country; and they are coming and asking you to extend these appropriations for the use of those particular cities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman wish more time?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I do not want to take up any other gentleman's time.

Mr. MOON. You will not.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. MOON. I yield the gentleman ten minutes more.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. What does this proposition mean? Why, sir, a postmaster in the district of a colleague of mine—I have no objection to mentioning his name, my colleague Mr. GILLETT—saw in a newspaper the announcement to which I have referred. Seeing this announcement he wrote to my colleague, saying: "Why can we not have one of these pneumatic tubes for Springfield?" That is how it will be when this thing is fairly started. From each city will come the application, "Why can we not have the tube in our city?" And by and by somebody will get up, as was the case yesterday in reference to the rural free delivery, and propose to divide this up by Congressional districts.

Do you get economical expenditure of the public money under circumstances of that kind? I say no. If we are to use this pneumatic tube, the Government should own and construct the parts of that service which are desirable. If we start these local companies all over the country and have them managed by the mainspring of a great central company owning and controlling or interested in all the local companies, we shall have a bill on this subject which, in all its bad characteristics, will resemble the river and harbor bill. We shall have a bill that we can not dare to discuss in the House, and which we shall have to pass in the House under a motion to suspend the rules and without opportunity for amendment.

Mr. THROPP. Do I understand the gentleman to assume the position that the Post-Office Department, notwithstanding that contracts with the companies owning the patents have already been made to a certain extent, can go on and use this system?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I will state in response to the gentleman that the testimony of Mr. Dilloway, a lawyer of eminence, before the Postal Commission, is to the effect that the patents were old; that most of them had expired, and he thought it possible, without infringement, that the Government could construct its own lines.

Mr. THROPP. And in that way the Government could own its own tubes without paying the royalties which are proposed to be charged, and may charge an extra postage to facilitate the passage of letters through the tubes?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Of course that could be done, if I understand the testimony. That is the way to use the tubes, if we are to use them at all. Let us use them with the payment of extra postage upon letters or mail matter transmitted through the tubes, so that the people of the country generally who do not obtain the benefit of the tubes will not be burdened for their maintenance.

Mr. THROPP. I entirely agree with the gentleman in that regard.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts going to introduce such an amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Oh, no. I shall not do so. There is no opportunity to prepare such an amendment, and I do not think it would be of any avail in reference to the pending bill.

I believe the gentleman from Illinois desired to ask a question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts this question. He spoke of fostering a trust in this pneumatic-tube business, it being under the control of the trust. As I understand it, this appropriation would not authorize the Post-Office Department to bind the Congress as to future appropriations in connection with this pneumatic mail service. I ask him, then, if that is not his construction of the provision embodied in the bill?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I suppose the Post-Office Department, in making additional contracts—for Boston, for instance—for this service, would be also required to extend it to Chicago, to Detroit, St. Louis, doubtless, and that there would be a pressure brought to bear from all of these cities and from other centers of business, demanding the inception or extension of the pneumatic-tube service. This pressure would come from all of the business centers of the country, and they would all be crying for more, more, more; and I tell you, gentlemen, that the time to stop is right now, in the very inception of the business.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the pressure would amount to anything unless the service was shown to be a success and of value to the people?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I do most emphatically. We examined this question in 1898. The postmaster at Brooklyn, Mr. Wilson, formerly a member of this House, a man of ability and character, said that, in his judgment, the pneumatic tube was of no practical use or value in that city. The postmaster at New York said that, in his judgment, it was a piece of extravagance; and the postmaster in Chicago, Mr. Gordon, said that he did not want it in that city. Generally, as far as we have been able to investigate the matter, we have reason to think that the service is of some value.

The demand for extension comes mainly from the people who are interested in organizing these companies and making a profit out of it. Now, that is all right. I have no objection to their doing so. That is a legitimate mode of transacting business. But we must distinguish between real and counterfeit.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me for a moment——

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that reports have come to the Department from the cities to which the gentleman has referred, or some of them, urging the establishment of the pneumatic-tube service in one way or another?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Yes; there seems to have been a change of opinion since the conversations to which I have referred. The trouble is, Mr. Chairman, that when the establishment of these local companies becomes a fact, they are enabled to bring influences to bear through business men who are willing to say that it is a good thing. The St. Louis business man says that it has been established in Boston, why should we not have it. Chicago says why should we not have what New York has; Baltimore thinks it ought to fare as well as Brooklyn, and so pressure is brought to bear upon the Department.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if we had a provision of law for the establishment of smallpox hospitals throughout the United States, to be located in different parts of the country, every district in the United States would want one of them. [Laughter.]

Mr. CORLISS. If the gentleman will permit me, as I understand it, Boston has now the pneumatic-tube service?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. In a very small way; only about three-quarters of a mile.

Mr. CORLISS. Does the gentleman wish to eliminate that from the appropriation here?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Yes; I am, as far as I am concerned, entirely willing to eliminate all the pneumatic-tube service.

Mr. CORLISS. Is the service in Boston satisfactory, and is the service rendered by the company there to the Department of any value to the mail service?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I will state to the gentleman that I do not live in Boston, and represent no part of it. My district is some little distance away. But I have already stated what the recommendation of the postmaster in Boston was in regard to this matter. The postmaster recommends it, and the service, so far as I know, shows good results. Now, our friends say, does this do any good? Well, yes; it does. If you had a letter down town in New York that you want delivered up at Central Park, if there was a pneumatic tube it would go up there a great deal quicker.

There would be some expedition of the mails as they arrive and depart at the great stations on their way farther along in the country—some, not a great deal. There would be some expedition of some small part of the whole mail, and a very considerable expedition of the local mail; but the expense would be entirely out of proportion to the benefits which would be obtained.

In New York, according to the testimony that was given to us, it cost $170,000 a mile, or a little over that, to lay their 5.85 miles of service, and, in addition to that, it cost over $150,000 a mile for what they paid for their patents to the Batchelder Pneumatic Tube Company, of Philadelphia.

There is benefit, it is true. You do not want to burn a house in order to boil an egg. You do not want to plunge your arm elbow deep into the public Treasury to get some good results to the public service. We have got to stop somewhere in this expedition of mails. Congress and the Department have considered expedition and never have considered economy.

I am not in favor of being mean with the public service, but I am in favor of that sound, economical business judgment which every man would exercise in his own affairs.

The whole pneumatic-tube question is before the Postal Commission. I agree that that commission ought to have reported before, but there are difficulties in the way, and the burden has been a heavy one, with all the other duties that we have all had to carry. If you do nothing more, I pray you, leave the question where it is until that commission report. Do not go ahead in the dark, in the face of the facts which I have stated to you, and which can not be obliterated.

Mr. FLEMING. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. FLEMING. I will yield time to the gentleman to answer. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if it is not a fact, as far as he knows and believes, that the Postal Commission are more nearly unanimous in condemning the extension of this pneumatic-tube system than upon any other proposition before them?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The gentleman is entirely right. I believe that with a single exception they are all against it, and that exception is simply that of a doubter.

Mr. THROPP. Can we not strike out this entire appropriation, and does not that relieve the Government of the contract?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It does, as I understand. The contracts are made subject to appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, one other consideration, and I am done. If, whenever a question of appropriating the public moneys comes before Congress, we are to be chloroformed by the deadly influence of the fact that some part of that public money is to go to our own district or our own State or our own section, then there is no more health for the public Treasury, and the time will come when the people will rise up and say that we have been unfaithful in the administration of our great trust.

The control of the public money belongs to the representatives of the people, belongs to this House. It can not be effectively exercised anywhere else except in this House. I beseech you, before you take another step, to examine carefully and act with the same prudence that you would use if you were transacting your own business. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I have not the time. My time has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I wish to ask you whether you favor the discontinuance of the service as it now exists in New York?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LOUD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] seems willing to eliminate this pneumatic-tube service from the city of Boston; but, as a Representative in part of that city, I wish to enter an emphatic protest against any elimination of pneumatic service in the city of Boston.

The facts with regard to that service in our city are that it has been so successful as not only to have the indorsement of the postmaster, but it has earned the indorsement of the leading merchants of that city, and they desire not only a continuation of the service we already have, but extensions of it; and the men most earnest in desiring these extensions are the great retail dealers, who transact an enormous business each year by mail, who sell hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of goods upon mail orders.

These mail orders do not come alone from the city of Boston, but from all the surrounding cities and towns—from my colleague's own district. Many and many of these orders are sent in from all over New England, and the people are enabled at the slight expense of a postal card or a postage stamp to order goods from merchants in Boston, who have a large assortment from which they can select. Now, anything that will expedite the receipt and sending out of these letters is a benefit not only to the business men of Boston, but to the housewives of all the surrounding towns, and to all who wish to transact business with the business men of a great city.

Something has been said, Mr. Chairman, about the service in Boston, and I shall take a part of my time in reading an extract from the Boston Transcript of April 23 of this year right on the subject. It is headed:

Mail-wagon service decreased—Boston post-office to demonstrate that the pneumatic tube can carry the paper and package mail.

I wish the committee to bear that in mind, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas that the tube service does not carry the paper mail.

All the mail-wagon trips between the post-office——

Mr. FLEMING. May I ask the gentleman a question at this point?

Mr. ROBERTS. Certainly.

Mr. FLEMING. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this 8-inch tube carries the paper mail?

Mr. ROBERTS. If the gentleman will wait until I have finished reading this article, he will find in it an answer to his question.

Mr. FLEMING. I would be very glad to hear it.

Mr. ROBERTS (reading)—

All the mail-wagon trips between the post-office and the North Station from 9 o'clock in the morning until about 11.15 o'clock have just been discontinued, and the entire mail passing between those points during that time is sent through the pneumatic tube. This is to demonstrate that the paper and package mail as well as the letter mail can go through the pneumatic tube and the wagon service can be reduced. It has worked to perfect satisfaction for three full days, which is almost sufficient guaranty for its continuance in this city. Between the hours mentioned the mail wagons used to make seven trips from the post-office to the railroad station, and eight trips in the opposite direction, handling the bulky mail for 61 trains arriving at and going out from the station. It requires about 75 additional dispatches through the pneumatic tube to handle this mail, and the machinery is in motion incessantly, although many more carriers could be shot through. An inspection of the character of the mail which now comes through the tubes was made recently, and it was found that one of the largest bundles contained 49 ten or twelve page newspapers. On the sorting tables there were only three packages too large for the tube, one of them being a calendar and another was a large photograph. These hours have been chosen for the experiment because it is the only time in the day that the wagon service can be dispensed with entirely. A little later the heavy paper mail begins to arrive, and the wagons have to make frequent trips.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the moment or two left me I desire to address myself briefly to the remarks of my colleague. He informs this committee that the Postal Commission have discovered——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LOUD. I will yield the gentleman two minutes more. That is all I can give.

Mr. ROBERTS. The Postal Commission has discovered a condition of rottenness in the letting or procuring of contracts for this pneumatic service. However that may be, I am not here to justify or condone anything that is crooked or dishonest in the matter. Yet, admitting that it is true, it is no argument against the benefits of the service itself; and that service has demonstrated, at least in the city of Boston, that it is desirable to be continued and extended.

Mr. LOUD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise principally to explain the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] in regard to a question that was asked of the representative of the Pneumatic Tube Company in the hearing before the Post-Office Committee. The representative of the company appeared before the committee with a proposition which he intended to submit to the Post-Office Department for the introduction of the pneumatic-tube service at a certain amount of money in 27 of the largest cities of the country. These 27 cities he named. They are: New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis, New Orleans, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, Milwaukee, Pittsburg, San Francisco, Washington, Denver, Indianapolis, Jersey City, Kansas City, Louisville, Minneapolis, Newark, Omaha, Providence, Rochester, St. Paul, Baltimore, and Atlanta.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. What occurred then is my justification.

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman is entirely right. I merely wish to explain that I followed his statement of the 27 cities with a sort of jocular remark, and the gentleman is entirely correct in the statement of it:

I suggest that you reach all but Mr. SPERRY'S, who is from New Haven.

Now, as a matter of fact, I want to say that the 27 cities did not reach all of the gentlemen who compose the Post-Office Committee. There are quite a number of them who have none of these 27 cities in their districts; and the remark was merely a facetious one, which ought not to have appeared as a part of the hearing. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entirely justified in saying what he did in regard to the matter.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having made a few remarks upon this subject yesterday, I wish to state my views briefly upon this pneumatic-tube service. I believe it does expedite the mails, but as to the extent is a question of doubt. In the hearings before the committee it was doubtful whether it expedited them a few minutes, half an hour, or an hour, or what length of time. I believe that it is a good thing for the expedition of the mails if the expense that attends it is not out of all proportion to what is gained in the saving of time. Personally, I am willing to have this expenditure carried on this year's bill. Personally, I am willing to have this experiment continued for the next year, where this pneumatic tube is located. And I should not object, perhaps, to extending it to one or two cities, but I am opposed, under the head of an experiment for increasing the rapidity of delivering the mails, of extending this indefinitely in all the large cities of the country until we know where we stand.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] is entirely correct in saying that in going into this blindly, without any knowing what the expenditure is ultimately to be, we are planning the way to a deficit and an expenditure of enormous amounts of money for which we should not get anything like a fair return. I shall vote for the appropriation in this bill because it is limited in amount; but what I fear is that in the future it will be with the pneumatic tube as it is with the rural free delivery—you get it into a few cities, and the representatives of every other large city will be clamoring for an appropriation to introduce the tube in his city. Therefore I want this appropriation, so long as it is carried in this bill, to grow gradually with the experience of the Department, and if the time comes that it has been demonstrated that we are expending more money for the service than we are getting out of it, then I want it cut out of this bill altogether.

Mr. LOUD. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I shall occupy the ten minutes, but I desire to submit to the committee, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and in view of my inquiry made to him, as well as my request that he give to the House all the testimony in connection with the pneumatic-tube service that forms a part of the report of the commission of which he is a member, they having gone into this question fully. Why he is not willing to do it I do not know. If unanimous consent was given by the House, there could be no demur on his part that the privileges of the RECORD were in any way being abused.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I should not object to unanimous consent if the House wants to print the testimony in the RECORD. If the clerk of the commission, who is clerk of your committee, will pick it out and put it in the RECORD, I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. Thank the gentleman. As to the question of an Assistant Postmaster-General going into the employ of a corporate interest after he leaves his public employment I have nothing to do with, and this House has nothing to do with it. It is a question of morals with himself. The gentleman from Massachusetts has stated it and made it public, and it is for the gentleman himself to defend, and neither for me or this House to take issue with. Whether it was by virtue of the knowledge of the value of the patent to the postal service, or whether it was by virtue of a desire to become associated with a corporation which he believed would be largely in the future beneficial to him, is wholly for the ex-Assistant Postmaster-General to determine. This question, to my mind, rests wholly upon the issue as to whether this service shall bring a fair return, in view of the expenditure, to the Government for the benefits given to the people.

The contracts existing to-day and expiring in 1901 cover the four services of the city of Philadelphia, the city of Boston, and the city of New York, with Brooklyn included. They cover an annual expenditure of $225,000 by appropriation, and by contract of about $223,000. The Postmaster-General has recommended an extension of the service, an increase of $500,000. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Shallenberger, came before our committee and in detail submitted why this service should be extended to the extent of $700,000 in the sum total.

The committee in its bill has made that recommendation. To what cities the Second Assistant Postmaster-General would decide to locate the service he did not make the committee his confidant, but simply stated that the selection would be made in the best interests of the service. The committee believed that statement and made the appropriation as a part of their bill. The whole question to be considered is the question of the usefulness in the sense of expedition. Expedition in the mails is the basis and the secret of increased revenues. You find it running through all the economic questions of to-day, more especially in the matter of railroad transportation, appertaining not only to your mail, but in the carriage of freight and in the carriage of passengers.

To us in the postal service, identified with it in a great city like mine, with almost a million and a half of people—and the city of New York and the great centers—is affected by one specific result, not so much the quick delivery of the letter that comes from Chicago to Philadelphia or from San Francisco to Philadelphia, although it is a well-recognized necessity that that delivery be as speedy as possible, but it is the building up of intercommunication in the city between the people of one section and that of another. If we can deliver a letter from one particular section to another, and have it answered in the same day, it is the largest contribution that can be made to the postal service and the revenue, for the reason that the delivery of a letter from one section of a city to the other is the cheapest and most economical, so far as expense is concerned, in the delivery of mail matter.

In other words, if you give the great cities the opportunity by expedition, whether by mechanical devices or by the increase of subordinate force, as all communications go through the mails at the same rates of postage that it costs to transmit a letter from Maine to the State of Washington, you can readily see how local or city letter matter can be handled at minimum cost, for there is no railroad transportation to pay.

Mr. SIBLEY. I believe your postmaster at Philadelphia stated that the increased service, doing a way with special messengers, would, in his judgment, meet the entire cost of the service in that city.

Mr. BINGHAM. He so stated it, without a doubt. And it will do the same in all the great cities.

Mr. SIBLEY. And the same testimony was substantially given from Boston and New York.

Mr. BINGHAM. Now, without making any invidious distinctions, with full recognition that it is the purpose of this House in the future (I trust under carefully guarded statute) to develop the rural free delivery—to what extent it may go no man in this House can now predict; that it should go wherever the people require it I heartily concede—I say that gentlemen from those rural sections must not forget that the revenues of the Government, so far as your postal administration is concerned, are to-day more largely contributed by the great cities in the expeditious work of the local free delivery than from any other source of revenue under the administration of the Department.

The money of the service is made in your great cities; and it is made from the expedition of the local free delivery. And, gentlemen, as you hope for the development of the rural free delivery in the future, I say to you, you must not impoverish your central reservoir, that gives you the money for this development, by depriving the cities of any physical or mechanical device that will contribute to expedition. You have the postal cars on your street railways in this city and other cities. Why? Because it is the quickest way of handling your mails from station to office or vice versa. So you have your carriers riding on bicycles, at a cost of thousands of dollars. Why? Because in that way the work is done more quickly, and therefore a mechanical device or aid is justified. And so this whole question must run wherever expedition can be secured.

The proposition submitted by the gentleman from Cincinnati in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, to the effect that the question was before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads as to whether we would accept the proposition of the parent company in connection with the pneumatic-tube service, was somewhat qualified. Let me go more largely into that question. The proposition was to handle the mails in 27 cities—not because those cities were identified with the gentlemen on the committee; I suppose there was identification in five, six, or seven cases—but because in certain great cities of the Union they offer to do this work at an expense of, in round numbers, two and a half million dollars, excluding $900,000 paid for wagon service.

Mr. SIBLEY. No, including the wagon service.

Mr. BINGHAM. Including the wagon service. That would be a little over $1,600,000 for pneumatic-tube service in these 27 great cities of the country. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General submitted that all he desired to do was handling the proposition of $700,000 as a sum total. We conceded that, and we excluded the larger proposition, although so good a business man as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] said that if the Government could secure a contract like that, the benefits to the people would be without limit and the compensation paid by the Government less almost than the word "reasonable" signifies.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does the gentleman favor extra postage for the use of these tubes?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am not in favor of extra postage; for the whole issue and trend to-day is toward uniform or lower rates of postage.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RIDGELY. I would like to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no objection to answering it, if I be allowed the time.

Mr. RIDGELY. One minute will be sufficient.

Mr. LOUD. I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] one minute, that he may answer the question of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY].

Mr. RIDGELY. My question is this: In view of the fact that the gentleman objects to extra postage for the use of these tubes, and in view of the fact that a plea has been made for the cities because business centers there, does not the gentleman know that the cities and their business depend upon the people in the rural districts, and those people in the rural districts are taxed as heavily to keep up the expense of the mail service as are the people in the cities?

Mr. BINGHAM. The first part of the gentleman's proposition I will not enter into, because I think it wholly unnecessary; but my main argument is that the real profit in the great cities, coming from the interchange of letters in said cities, gives you the largest revenue for the minimum of expense; in other words, the intercommunication of a million or two millions of people renders a big return when it is located within the limits of a city, and not extended over a large range of country, as, for instance, between Maine and California, where railroad fare and transportation are a part of the expense.

Mr. RIDGELY. But that is only possible by reason of the rural population.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, this subject has been so ably argued by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] and the gentleman from Boston [Mr. ROBERTS] that there is little left for me to say.

There is not a daily newspaper in the city of New York that has not its own pneumatic-tube service. It is an indispensable requisite for the newspaper business. The pneumatic tube, Mr. Chairman, like the elevator, is here, and it has come to stay. This House, for two Congresses, refused to appropriate money even to run an elevator. They laughed it to scorn; but things are changing; the world is progressing. The elevator is in universal use.

Now, sir, I have received from several associations in New York and from many business men—and shall doubtless receive many more such—letters and dispatches urging me to advocate this pneumatic-tube service. I know its value. The people of New York know its value. They have tried it, as I have said, in the newspaper offices in that great city, and no establishment which operates on any considerable scale can be considered as complete without this adjunct. Now, if it is good for the newspapers of the city, it is equally good for the business interests of the people. It increases the facilities of the postal service and increases business, and in time will become a source of revenue.

Mr. Chairman, the city of New York pays a net profit to this Government of $5,000,000 every year on the postal service. A portion of this money goes to South Carolina for free rural delivery; a very little goes to Georgia; more of it perhaps goes to the State of Ohio; but it is distributed throughout the whole Union for your rural free delivery and for other necessities connected with your postal system. You have your free delivery simply because of the money which the Government makes out of the large post-office receipts coming from the great cities of the country—post-offices like those of the city of New York.

Now, are you going to turn around and tell us that we are not to be allowed a modicum of these five millions for our own use? Are you going to say to us that we can not use any portion of the money to expedite and improve our service there? Are you going to refuse to allow us to expend $750,000 of the $5,000,000 that we pay annually for your benefit for the betterment of our service in that and other large cities? If you do, then, to use language that has been used on this floor, we are the "skinned" and you are the "skinnees." [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, something has been said in regard to the postmaster at New York and his position on this pneumatic-tube service. Let me read what he does say:

In reply to your letter of the 3d of August, regarding electric and cable car service, I have to report that no service of the former character is in operation in this city. With regard to the latter, the cable-car service, I have to state that the only service of that nature which is in operation here is that performed on the cars of the Third Avenue Railroad route, No. 307013, and that no extension has been made therein during the past year; in fact, this service has been curtailed during that period to the extent that the separation of mail thereon has been discontinued (with the exception of that posted in the cars), and the service now performed consists of an exchange of closed pouches made up at the general post-office and at the various branch stations. This curtailment has been effected through the introduction of the pneumatic tubes, a large portion of the letter mail formerly dispatched via the cable cars now being sent via the tube.

When the tube system between the general post-office and Branch Station H is in full operation so as to embrace all of the intermediate stations, which I am informed by the Tubular Dispatch Company will be very shortly, service on the Third avenue cable cars can be discontinued below Forty-second street, as there will be practically nothing to be done on the cars, the letter mail being sent by tube and the bulky paper matter by wagon. Before this could be done, however, arrangements would have to be made for a switch at Forty-second street, there being none there at present. If it is deemed advisable to do this at any time, and it is found to be practicable to do so, it would effect a reduction in mileage of 418 trips per week of 3 miles each and a reduction in wagon-service route No. 407005 of 1,672 trips per week of 0.03 mile each and 836 trips per week of 0.27 mile each.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman yield at this point for a question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No, I can not. The gentleman should not ask me to yield when I have only five minutes.

Mr. FLEMING. The gentleman need not lose his temper.

Mr. CUMMINGS. You know that I have only about five minutes, and I can not allow you to take up the little time that remains.

Mr. FLEMING. I am very sorry to have aroused the gentleman's indignation.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Of course the gentleman knows that I mean no discourtesy to him; but when I have but a very few moments left it must be apparent that I can not, in justice to myself, yield any of that time.

Mr. FLEMING. I did not know what time the gentleman had. He might have had a half hour as far as I knew.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Oh, well, I accept the gentleman's apology. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLEMING. I have offered no apology. None was necessary, as far as I was concerned, and none has been tendered. I simply asked a polite question.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am sorry I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. With the permission of the House, I will extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a word as to the figures given in the minority report. With reference to this service in New York let me read:

The line is of double pneumatic tubes, and is over 58,000 feet long, not taking into calculation bends, switches, and special work. The pipe used by this company is not common pipe, but specially made pipe, and of a special grade of iron which can not be bought for less than 75 cents a foot; besides this, every foot of it has to be bored like an engine cylinder, which makes the cost of it over three times the figures mentioned.

The ditch is not an ordinary ditch, but specially planned, and the pipe buried as near as possible in a straight line, and is in some instances 16 feet below the pavement. In the laying of the pipe, water, gas, and other pipes have to be removed to enable it to be laid straight. It has to be laid on special foundations, and must be carefully tamped to prevent its settling or in other ways getting out of line. Drip pots for catching moisture, sewer connections, etc., to relieve the pipe of condensation, etc., have to be put in every few hundred feet. Manholes have to be constructed, at enormous expense, for the purpose of reaching the switches, drip pots, and bends. Every curve is a brass bend, and none of them costs less than $200 apiece.

In some districts the excavations cost not less that $8 a foot. This cost must be increased where solid rock is encountered or where the pipe is laid below tide water. The replacing of the pavement at the regular New York City rates costs over $1.50 a running foot, not calculating special work around manholes, etc. The machinery in one station (the general post-office) cost more than $34,000, the amount named by the committee as their minimum estimate of construction.

The statement in the minority report that only a single pipe is laid shows that the committee knows absolutely nothing about it. There are invariably two pipes laid, one in either direction. The pipe itself can not be connected in the ditch, with the special air-tight joint, for less than 50 cents a foot after it is put in place (which for two pipes will be $1 per running foot of the trench). This does not include the connecting up of drip pots, manholes, switches, and other special apparatus.

The company has spent in the last year over $34,000 in improvements on this line. The system requires the use of three power stations, one entire building being devoted to boilers, engines, and machinery. Power from two independent power stations of the company, exclusive of the post-office station, costs the company over $30,000 a year. The Government tried to run these lines at the beginning and it resulted in a dismal failure. The disbursement paid by the Government for the operation of this line was not less than at the rate of $30,000 per annum, and the amount of $10,000 mentioned by the committee as being allowed for operating expenses was only a compromise, so that the company could properly operate the line. On this item alone a company has relieved the Government to the extent of $20,000 per annum on their contract. Besides this, the company has installed the new power station, which reduces the amount of steam that the Government has to furnish under their contract, at an increased cost to the company of between $12,000 and $15,000.

The cost of operating this line, including double shifts of engineers and operators, can not be done for less than 60 per cent of its rental, which is then cheaper than electric roads are operated. The company pays over $12,000 per annum for taxes and percentages to the city for the franchise of the tubes. The company is not and never has been in position to pay anything upon its capital stock. Outside of the cost of construction of the line, it went to enormous expense in not only acquiring the patents but in obtaining its franchises, for which it is now receiving nothing. The total carrier mileage of the line to-day is 16,890 miles.

This information, Mr. Chairman, comes from official sources and is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to animadvert upon the remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], because I see that he is not in his seat at the present time. I simply desire to say that an argument made wholly by innuendo neither conveys to me any information nor does it excite or prejudice me against an affirmative proposition.

This proposed appropriation comes to us from the committee having the matter in charge, guided by that most honest, painstaking, and patriotic of gentlemen [Mr. LOUD], its chairman. I believe that it might be possible once in a while to consider a bill in this House without encountering the opposition of the members of the Committee on Appropriations. I notice that everything which they formulate seems to them at least to be all right, and a great many things which other committees formulate seem to them to be all wrong.

Now, Mr. Chairman, up to a year ago, I was strongly prejudiced against this pneumatic-tube system. About a year ago I was led to make a careful examination of its features and also of the practicability of introducing it into the city of St. Louis, which I have the honor in part to represent, and after reading all the testimony available, and examining the system, I became convinced that it was one of the things we needed in St. Louis.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been an earnest friend and advocate of, and I have stood first and last by the free rural-delivery system. I believe it is a good thing, and that every measure which Congress can adopt which will bring the people into closer relations with each other, and that will facilitate the means of communication between them is a good thing, whether the Government makes any profit on it or not.

I observe in examining the statistics of the Post-Office Department that 16 cities of the United States, after paying all the expenses of their local postal systems, produce a net revenue to the Government of nearly $18,000,000 a year, and the city of St. Louis, where I live, produces and pays over to the Government a net profit of $1,200,000 every year. I think that inasmuch as this great accumulation of profit of nearly $18,000,000 from these 16 cities goes to develop and to carry on your rural free-delivery system, we are entitled to all the devices that the Government can bring into action, which will be fairly calculated to give us every facility which money can buy or genius can invent. [Applause.]

I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to drawing this line of demarcation between country and city. What helps one class of people helps another in this country, and what injures one class of people injures another class. All these contracts are under the control of Congress, subject to appropriation, and if the frauds insinuated by the gentleman from Massachusetts exist in connection with this business it is within the power of Congress at any time not only to investigate them, but to put the heel of condemnation upon them by withdrawing the entire appropriation.

This system, Mr. Chairman, is beyond the field of experimentation. Its benefits have been proven by actual practice in four of the cities of this country and in a number of the great cities of Europe, and the system is entirely practicable. It has come to stay, and whether it costs $500,000 or $5,000,000, if it will facilitate the mails and bring the people of the country closer together then they have been before, I am in favor of the appropriation, whatever it shall amount to, if reasonable. There is no question, Mr. Chairman, about the benefits of the system.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, by consent of the House I add to my remarks a tabulated statement of the receipts and expenditures and profits realized from 16 cities of the country.

* Average, 54.

Mr. LOUD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to argue the merits or demerits of the pneumatic-tube service. Its merits have been well established by its use in four cities of the country, and not only in our own country, but in all the civilized countries of the world where the pneumatic-tube system is now in practical operation. New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and Boston have the benefits of that system. Can the opponents of the appropriation asked for in this bill assign a single reason why the system should not be extended to my city, when money has been appropriated for New York, Philadelphia, and other Eastern cities? If they have the benefits of that system, we want it in our city. We need it and we must have it.

In the near future we shall celebrate in the city of St. Louis a world's fair, and for the purpose of handling the vastly increased mail matter which will come to that city on account of the world's fair we must have increased postal facilities.

As my colleague from St. Louis [Mr. PEARCE] has truly said, the city of St. Louis is contributing $1,200,000 a year of net profit for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the mail service in the rural districts of this country. In other words, the revenues of the Government from the city of St. Louis are $1,200,000 in excess of its expenditures. This being the case, Mr. Chairman, we ask that whatever means science may afford for the facilitation of the mail we should have. We have a right to ask for it and should have it, no matter what the expense may be.

In order to show how important this pneumatic-tube service will be in my city, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask the Clerk to read a part of a statement made by the postmaster of St. Louis before the committee. He is one of the most efficient postal officials in this country.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pneumatic-tube service is not intended to make more deliveries in large cities. The pneumatic-tube service is not intended to advance only the local mail in cities. The mail principally advanced is the outgoing and incoming mail. The mails from Texas and other States are as important to our merchants as the merchants who mail the letters. The same applies to every part of the country. If you will allow me just to state the conditions and make a comparison between the present method and the proposed method, I think a few points will show you the advantage. First, the present method—hauling the mail by wagons—represents the handling of an accumulation of mail. The pneumatic service means the handling of mail by continuous service. The wagons are steady—the time is fixed for their leaving—but, if the language can be used, they go steady by jerks, but by the pneumatic-tube system it is one continuous flow.

Now, to begin, our Union Station is located just 1 mile from the post-office. The length of time required for the hauling of that mail is fifteen minutes, ten minutes allowed for terminal transportation from the wagon to the cars, making in all twenty-five minutes, but bear in mind it is not only a race with the twenty-five minutes to see if we can get the mail to this station or from the station quicker than twenty-five minutes, but that wagon service means an accumulation of mail for hours, from one to ten hours and longer sometimes, and consequently the wagon is loaded to the guards and it reaches then not only the twenty-five minutes, but the time saved by this continuous flow of mail either from or to the station. At St. Louis we have five deliveries through the business districts, three deliveries in the resident districts. We ask for no more and want no more. The mails, however, come in at a time when they are hard to handle, between the hours of 7.30 and 8.30 in the morning, and between the hours of 6.30 and 8 in the evening, 95 per cent of the mail received at St. Louis, 95 per cent of all the mail which comes in.

So far as the local mail is concerned, we simply seek to advance that through the handling from the office for outgoing trains so as to enable our merchants to close their mails later, and so on the incoming trains to get the mails delivered earlier. In all large cities the second morning delivery by carrier is the important delivery, especially to the banks and to the larger commercial houses, department stores, and manufacturers. It is necessary that all of these bankers, merchants, and large business interests deposit their checks in time for the clearing house. Right there is one important feature. All banks clear through the clearing house, and all checks must be in before 10 o'clock in the morning, or else one day's interest is lost. The amount of interest of those checks day by day at the end of the year would pay for the pneumatic tube itself. We ask for a pneumatic tube connecting our Union Station, the Relay Depot, East St. Louis, and certain important business districts.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, the postmaster at St. Louis calls attention to two facts in that statement which I should like the House to understand. One is that the pneumatic-tube service is not only for the city, but is for the country as well. The country merchant is benefited by the facilities afforded by this system just as much as the city merchant is. The second point is the time saved and the money saved to the merchant when he is enabled to deposit his checks a day sooner than he would otherwise be able to do.

Mr. LOUD. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. NOONAN].

Mr. NOONAN. Mr. Chairman, as to the pneumatic-tube service, my own observation in the city of Chicago leads me to believe that it is now time that that city should receive the benefit of a share of this appropriation for that purpose. I think gentlemen do not rise to the occasion when they oppose such a provision. I have not any doubt that a thorough investigation of the benefits of extending this system to Chicago would furnish proof in favor of the consideration of the appropriation.

Chicago is the largest city in the country in actual domain in square miles. We have five great depot centers; railroad termini at different points, miles apart; three great divisions of the city, separated by the Chicago River, the stock-yards interests being far remote from the center of the city. The convergence by the pneumatic-tube service of the postal facilities of these different points would enhance the value of business by its expedition. The exploits of genius in mechanical devices, in labor-saving devices, is to bring the minds of men together and to facilitate the manufacture and transportation of material from producer to consumer. This pneumatic-tube service aids in this. We should take advantage of the opportunity. Not only do we bring the minds of men together by communication, but it facilitates the transaction of business in a large city, where time is of greatest value.

The Western Union Telegraph Company in Chicago use the pneumatic tube service to transmit messages between branch offices and the main office.

When a private corporation finds such a device and service successful and profitable, I think the Government should avail itself of some benefits for the transaction of postal business in Chicago.

I am in favor of the report of the committee for that appropriation.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, when the minority of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads presented their report to this House, objecting to the continuation of the pneumatic-tube service, it was upon the idea that this House, having already appointed a commission to investigate the merits of this system and report upon the whole general postal system of the country, should be informed as to the facts, that commission having failed to report. We thought that this having been done, it was best that the House proceed no further in the extension of these alleged facilities to other cities until the report was made. It is not our purpose, then, to move to strike out of the bill all of this item, so as to deprive the cities of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia at present, where the service now exists, of the present service, but to call the attention of the House to the facts, in order that the House itself might determine, upon the threshold of the introduction of this new system of transporting the mails, whether it was wise to extend it or not.

In our judgment, the benefits to be derived are by no means commensurate with the cost of the system; yet we thought it was best, when the report was made, to await the results of the report of that commission before we abandoned that system entirely. Therefore at the end of this debate we shall move to strike out the words "seven hundred and twenty-five thousand" and restore the appropriation of $225,000, as it was before, unless developments shall justify the motion to strike the item from the bill.

It is insisted by gentlemen who represent large cities elsewhere in the country that it is a matter of injustice to them not to extend this system to their cities. Assuredly, if benefits are to be derived, or can be derived, in the cities in which it is now used for the people generally, the system ought to be extended throughout the country; but it means, when we do this, to duplicate the cost of the whole Post-Office Department.

When we look to the facts of the operation of this system in one city we can determine, as the minority determined, that the service is not worth the cost. It is a pure, simple business proposition. It is not a question of contest between country districts and city districts. The question is whether it is best for the whole people for the Government of the United States to inaugurate this system throughout the country or not. Let us take the city of New York and see the operations of the system there. The first proposition is, Are the benefits derived to the people of the city of New York worth the money that is paid for them? Take the testimony produced before the committee, scan closely the evidence of every man upon that subject, and we find the testimony to be about this: Some believe that the mails of that city are expedited by the use of the tube from ten to twenty minutes, some from twenty to thirty minutes. The highest figure, however, put it, according to my recollection, at fifty minutes. Now, the tube in New York City is 30,000 feet long. The tube is used in the heart of that great city only. A small, limited area of New York, therefore, is covered by it.

The tube cost anywhere from $34,000 to $300,000, quite a range in estimate of cost, judging from the evidence. The Government pays to-day to the owners of that patent the sum of $148,000 for the use of the tube, and the Government operates it itself and pays $10,000 for operating expenses. Now, in a great city where you have eight free deliveries daily, where the people can get their mail once an hour during the business hours of the day, what is the value of a tube that only expedites the mail ten minutes? We have no use for that tube. It gives us no benefit that we ought to take and pay the cost that we have to pay for it. If by the use of the tube any other expense in the carrying of the mail was diminished, there might be some reason for its use. But we are told by Mr. Shallenberger, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, that the bicycle carriers are still in use; that the wagon carriage is still in use. The mail, the bulk of it, is still transported from one station to another by wagons. That wagon service has not been diminished one iota.

The Government to-day pays every dollar for the wagon service that it paid heretofore. The mail is expedited ten to twenty minutes by the pneumatic tube at an expense of $158,000 to the people of the United States, and that, too, in an area where you get eight free deliveries daily.

Now, if you propose to extend the system to the other cities and pay a like sum, you will run into hundreds and millions of dollars expenditure for the pneumatic-tube service. Our judgment is that it is a bad proposition of business, that at least for the present this House ought not to sanction any appropriation that looks to the continuation of this service. Let the House wait until the postal commission reports, when all the facts are before it, and then, if it seems wise and just, if it seems for the interest of this country that the system be continued, it is time enough to continue it. Therefore, I move, Mr. Chairman, that after the word "otherwise," on line 6, page 15, the word "seven" be stricken out and the word "two" inserted; so that the section will read: "for the transportation of mail by pneumatic tube and other similar service, by purchase or otherwise, $225,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 6, after the word "otherwise," strike out "seven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two;" so that it will read, "$225,000."

Mr. MOON. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman should use all of his time now.

Mr. MOON. If the gentleman insists that we shall use all of our time, we will do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has used all of his time. The remainder of the time belongs to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with the position taken by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] regarding this appropriation. I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], and I want to say that so far as his remarks apply to the service in New York it is correct and nothing new. The House was substantially informed of as much of this matter one year ago as I thought at that time could safely be presented to the House in view of the fact that the testimony of the committee had not been published. I have stated before that the service in New York was conceived in sin and born in iniquity, and to that extent I quite agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts. But if that be a fact I can not anticipate why from year to year the House should continue this most iniquitous portion of this service.

Mr. MOON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman is a member of the Postal Commission. It was out of deference alone to that commission that I made the suggestion that we wait until the commission reports. If the gentleman, as a member of that commission, is of the opinion that he now expresses, I desire to change my motion to amend, and move to strike out the whole section.

Mr. LOUD. I do not care what the gentleman's motion is; I was only discussing the motion he had presented. I have been over this subject so many times and my position here is so well known that I do not care to say much about it. But as chairman of the committee of course the House must understand that I can not take a position antagonistic to this item in the appropriation bill. I have stated to this House for three years that they should either continue this service or strangle it. For three years they have continued the service, and, as I said the other day, I thought I knew when I was hit over the head with a club as readily as any man.

If three years is not long enough for this Congress to establish what it proposes to do, I would like, in God's name, to know how long you have got to continue an experiment of this kind? The committee had expected that after these years had passed by it was the policy of Congress to continue the pneumatic-tube service. Why, sir, New York, and Philadelphia, and Boston, and Brooklyn can not have all the good things there are in this world, if this be a good thing. As I said before, I believe we started this thing wrong. I have said the same thing regarding the perpetuation of the rural free-delivery service. But, as gentlemen understand, after you embark upon a proposition, and it becomes the settled policy of Congress, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads must then assume that you propose to continue it.

Now, when you come to analyze carefully this rural free-delivery service, you must see that under this service, so far as it is being established to-day, the average number of people served by a carrier is not in excess of 500. What does that mean? At least $1 per head for the father and mother and every child in the family. And I think if rural free-delivery service means, as it must mean (if that be a correct representation of the case), sixty or seventy million dollars to expedite the mails through the rural districts of the country, then the few millions that may be expended for pneumatic-tube service are so insignificant as hardly to be worthy of consideration.

I do not know what this is going to develop. I know there was a statement made before the committee—and it is now on file with the Second Assistant Postmaster-General—giving in detail the estimates, in which the Batchelder Pneumatic Tube Company said that they would put into those 27 cities the pneumatic-tube service, including the wagon service, at a total cost of $2,522,000.

And that wagon service amounts to $900,000. I said at the hearing that if this could be done I was in favor of it. I question whether it can be done; but I know there is on file in the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General to-day a segregated, detailed statement regarding each one of these 27 cities. I have some faith in the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, and he has given me personally many assurances that he would not extend this service if it were to cost in any one city any more than the itemized amount presented to him by this company. And I never would have been brought even to the point of giving assent to this proposition until I had talked with both the Second Assistant and with the Postmaster-General. They believe this can be done; and I believe that if this project can not be carried out the Second Assistant Postmaster-General will not undertake to extend the pneumatic-tube service.

I have nothing further to say, Mr. Chairman, and am ready for a vote.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My object in making this motion is first to call attention to this appropriation—where it began and where it now is. It had its inception in the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. The Committee on Appropriations has never directly had anything to do with the recommendations touching it. It is true that after it was started in the cities where it exists it became necessary under the contracts which had been made in pursuance of the appropriation to operate it; and the sundry civil bill for 1898 and 1899 carried this item:

> For supplying necessary power and repairs to power plants for operating pneumatic tubes for the transmission of mail matter, court-house and post-office buildings, Philadelphia, Pa., New York City, and Brooklyn, N. Y., and the post-office and subtreasury building, Boston, Mass., $20,000.

In other words, in these public buildings, in connection with the steam plants, they had to furnish the power for pneumatic-tube service under the contracts that had been made. The contracts were sent for, the whole matter was fully investigated, and as there was a legal liability under the law and under the appropriation and under the contracts, the sundry civil bill carried, and still carries, the items that I have referred to.

Mr. BINGHAM. The buildings being under the control of the Treasury Department.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes. Now, that is all the Committee on Appropriations has ever had to do with this whole matter.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this discussion. I will not take time in replying to my friend the gentleman from Missouri, who thought he would strengthen his case by making the chestnutty old fling at the Committee on Appropriations, because, forsooth, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] was a member of it. He might as well have taken his fling at the Postal Commission, of which the gentleman from Massachusetts is also a member, such membership charging him with a duty to the House which he has been performing.

But that is all "leather and prunella." I care nothing about it. So far as I am concerned, I am going to vote against this appropriation [applause], for the reason that I think our great blocks of population, that I have great pride in and respect for, are already reasonably supplied with mail facilities—four or five deliveries, and in some places six deliveries, a day by post-office carriers.

A MEMBER. In some places nine.

Mr. CANNON. In some places nine. That is proper; I am not complaining of it. In addition to that there are the substations scattered all over the cities, and the money-order stations and all that kind of thing. And we see, Mr. Chairman, when we come to the post-office at New York City—a big city covering a large area of ground—the post-office in some instances a long way from certain business or residence parts of the city, but substations abound all over the city, just as is the case in other cities everywhere throughout the land.

Here is the carrier service with its eight or nine deliveries a day. If that service is not enough, we find these various substations and branch offices to help out the service and to accommodate the people; and when we consider all of these things I think that the United States does just as much as it ought to do to give a prompt, proper, and efficient service. There can be no question of that. If, however, that is not sufficient, there is the telephone service and the telegraph service, which is available to all people. If a private citizen wants greater speed, or is not satisfied with the postal service, he can resort to the telephone service or to the telegraph service—and many of them do so. If he finds fault with the postal service, these are available to him. If he is not willing to rely upon the eight or nine deliveries a day in his district, he has got, in addition to the telephone and telegraph service, the messenger-boy service, and many business men use the messengers.

Now, in my judgment, we have gone just as far as we ought to go in response to public demands for rapid mail delivery in the great post-office cities of the country. We have gone as far as we ought to go in reference to the expenditures under the Post-Office Department in caring for speedy mails in the great centers of business and population—just as far as we ought to go in justice to the Treasury, and I may say, Mr. Chairman, in justice to that very population itself. All of our people are interested in this matter. These cities are a part and parcel of the general population of the United States.

All of our people, whether they live in the cities or in the rural communities, are interested in this service, and all want to see it improved, and the cities themselves would not prosper very long without the aid of the rural communities. What is good policy for us in the rural districts of Illinois is good policy for the teeming millions in New York or in Chicago. I do not separate them. They are all alike interested in this common cause. We are "all in the same boat" in that regard. When the taxes are collected and the expenditures are to be paid, we all should bear an equal share of them. I think, therefore, that this expenditure with reference to the postal service has gone far enough, and to be entirely fair I will vote to strike out all of this appropriation, and if that fails I will vote to wipe all out except the current appropriation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I can see no reason whatever, in justice or in sound principles of taxation, why the Post-Office Department of the United States ought not to be self-sustaining at the present time. There is not another country in the world that does not make its post-office department sustain itself. Some of them, indeed, give large revenues to the government.

I can not understand, therefore, why, under proper management in the United States, our own Postal Department ought not to bear its own share of governmental expenditure, and become, as it ought to be, entirely self-sustaining. The Government furnishes buildings without rent for the service; it furnishes hundreds of clerks in the Auditor's department of the Treasury, the expenses of which are charged to the Treasury Department of the Government, and yet year after year the Post-Office Department shows up a deficiency. Only a year or two ago it was $12,000,000, and now they make an estimate of a deficiency reduced to the sum of some three or four millions of dollars. But, as I understand it, the committee was forced, by some pressure, to bring in an appropriation which would carry that deficiency up to seven or eight millions of dollars.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to these extravagant appropriations not only in this, but in all of the other Departments of the Government. I do not mean to cast any reflection upon the efficiency of the postal service. It is unquestionably an efficient service. No one can deny that; but at the same time it is most costly, the least economically managed system in the public service and probably in the world. And if there is a crying need to-day in the management of our Government affairs, it is that some good, competent business man should be placed at the head of that Department to make it economical as well as self-sustaining and efficient.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. FLEMING. Gladly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You say that the Post-Office Department is not economically administered. Now, do you think that there are too many clerks employed in that Department?

Mr. FLEMING. I will say, in response to the gentleman from Wisconsin, that I do not know exactly in what respect this money has been unwisely expended. I only know the general results which have come to the service. I do not now undertake to say in what specific manner extravagance has been shown in the management of the Department. I am speaking of the results which are manifest to us all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then do you concede that the clerks who are employed are too highly paid for their services?

Mr. FLEMING. I will not answer that question, for I do not know.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Somewhere, in either the one or the other of these items, must lie the extravagance of which the gentleman from Georgia complains. Now, will he state where that extravagance is to be found?

Mr. FLEMING. Yes; I will tell the gentleman some of the extravagant features of the administration of the Post-Office Department. We have a considerable amount expended, for instance, in this very service we are now considering, the pneumatic-tube service. A large amount is expended in the railroad rates—the pay for carrying the mails; and we have a large expenditure in the transmission of the mails of second-class mail matter that never was intended to go at the rate—so much of it is now allowed to go. I have now stated three particulars in which more economy should be practiced.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that last is owing to the extravagance of the Post-Office Department or to the extravagance of the legislators who make the laws?

Mr. FLEMING. I will answer the gentleman. It was originally the extravagance of the Post-Office Department or the failure of the head of the Department to properly rule on the law as Congress passed it; and each succeeding Postmaster-General has followed that precedent until now it has become practically a law, and it seems that the members of this House are not willing to go back to the original status. The responsibility now rests on Congress.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit me right there?

Mr. FLEMING. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says the initial error was in the construction put upon the law by the Postmaster-General. Now, does that refer to the fact that the Postmaster-General held as lawful the distribution through the mails as second-class matter of these serial books?

Mr. FLEMING. I understand the Postmaster-General dit it on the advice of the law officer of the Government.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman know that that identical thing is what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] said was one of the prime objects of the law when it was first passed—the distribution of that matter—and instead of being a violation of the intention of the legislators when they passed it, it was exactly what they had in mind?

Mr. FLEMING. I do not know that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] can be appealed to as authority on all questions, but I think he is certainly right on this one (pneumatic-tube service), and he is generally right on the appropriations, for he has certainly made an honest effort in this Congress to hold them down. I want to say further, Mr. Chairman, that the people are going to send somebody here to put a stop to this extravagance if we do not stop it ourselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. Does he desire to amend the motion?

Mr. MOON. Yes; I desire the motion to be to strike out lines 5, 6, and 7, on page 15, carrying the whole appropriation for the pneumatic-tube service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15 strike out lines 5, 6, and 7, the matter to be stricken out being as follows:

"For transportation of mail by pneumatic tube, or other similar devices, by purchase or otherwise, $725,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. THROPP) there were—ayes 87, noes 50.

Accordingly, the amendment to strike out was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, of which a sum not exceeding $40,000 may be employed to pay freight on postal cards, stamped envelopes, and stamped paper, and other supplies from the manufactories to the post-offices and depots of distribution, $33,870,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. I rise for the purpose of making a request of the House. I have some data upon this question, pertaining to inland railway mail transportation, which I should like to place in the RECORD, and not to delay the House. My remarks will be wholly pertinent to the question, not going outside of it. I therefore ask unanimous consent that I may have that privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] asks unanimous consent to insert some remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For railway post-office car service, $4,500,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph which the Clerk is just about to read is one on which an hour has been set apart for general debate.

Mr. LOUD. Had not the paragraph better be read?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I want to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph has not yet been read.

Mr. TAWNEY. I know it has not been read; but there are several propositions in the paragraph that are subject to a point of order, and I desire to know whether or not, in the event that the whole paragraph is read, the opportunity to raise the point of order to these particular parts of the paragraph will have been lost?

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph may be read, with the understanding that the gentleman will make the point of order afterwards.

Mr. TAWNEY. As to any particular item in the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Railway Mail Service: One General Superintendent, at $3,500; 1 assistant general superintendent, at $3,000; 1 chief clerk, office of General Superintendent, $2,000; 11 division superintendents, at $2,500 each; 11 assistant division superintendents, at $1,800 each; 21 assistant superintendents, at $1,600 each; 85 chief clerks, in charge of lines, at $1,600 each; 748 clerks, class 5, at $1,400 each; 479 clerks, class 5a, at $1,300 each; 938 clerks, class 4b, at $1,200 each; 694 clerks, class 4a, at $1,150 each; 3,405 clerks, class 3, at $1,000 each; 2,187 clerks, class 2, at $900 each; 525 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to reserve the point of order on this paragraph; but pending that, I desire to state to the chairman of the committee that it is my purpose to offer as a substitute for this provision the bill for the reclassification of the rai way postal clerks, known as H. R. 2, upon which, of course, the chairman of the Post-Office Committee will make the point of order. At least, he has indicated his purpose so to do. Now, I ask that the points of order as to both propositions be reserved, and that both propositions be discussed on their merits, with a view to determining which is most equitable and just and which shall go out of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. That seems to be a very fair proposition, Mr. Chairman, but I shall have to insist on the gentleman making his point of order on this paragraph before we go any further, in order that we may know where we are.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the gentleman will not insist upon that, as an hour has been set apart for general debate upon this paragraph. I simply wanted to reserve the right to make the point of order as to this paragraph at the end of the discussion instead of now. That was my only object.

Mr. LOUD. I am sorry to say to the gentleman that personally I could not make that agreement with him. If he wants to raise the point of order against this paragraph, I insist that it should be made before the debate comes on this subject; and if it is to go out, it had better go out, and then we will know where we are.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, is it competent to do this by the unanimous consent of the committee—that is, that the question of whether or not this paragraph is in order be pending during the discussion of the bill and the proposition which I intend to offer as a substitute for it? If it is, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the question of whether or not this paragraph is in order be pending and considered at the expiration of the time allowed for general debate on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that he may reserve the point of order upon the paragraph just read until after the discussion thereof at the end of the hour. Is there objection?

Mr. LOUD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made by the gentleman from California.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent for this, that the present paragraph and H. R. No. 2 be considered as pending, and that they be submitted to a vote in this committee at the expiration of one hour's debate.

The CHAIRMAN. House bill No. 2, the Chair will say, is not before the committee in any shape or form.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I then offer the following as a substitute for the paragraph which has just been read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That was contained in my request for unanimous consent.

Mr. TAWNEY. Reserving the point of order, and to be inserted after the word "each," on line 10, page 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers the following, which the Clerk will read.

Insert after the word "each," line 10, page 16, the following:

"That on and after the 1st day of July, 1900, employees of the Post-Office Department known as railway postal clerks shall be divided into ten classes and be paid according to the following rates per annum: First class, not exceeding $800; second class shall receive $900; third class shall receive $1,000; fourth class shall receive $1,100; fifth class shall receive $1,200; sixth class shall receive $1,300; seventh class shall receive $1,400; eighth class shall receive $1,500; ninth class shall receive $1,600; tenth class shall receive $1,800.

"The Postmaster-General may, however, at his discretion, temporarily reduce the salary of any clerk as a penalty for delinquency or misconduct in such sum as he may deem necessary for the maintenance of discipline and efficient service; such reductions to be based upon a demerit system, which shall be uniform throughout the service.

"That the original appointments to the position of railway postal clerk shall be made to class 1 for a probationary period of six months from the date of the same, less such time as the appointee may have performed service as a substitute clerk, as provided by the postal laws and regulations and the civil-service laws and regulations; and no permanent appointment shall be made before the expiration of the probationary period, and then only when the appointee shall have shown himself proficient in his duties, fully competent to perform the same, and has made a satisfactory record.

"Promotions shall be based solely upon efficiency, faithfulness, and good conduct, and the clerk must serve at least six months in each class before being promoted to a higher class: Provided, That on lines upon which full railway post-office cars have been authorized by the Postmaster-General a clerk appointed to a crew of five or more shall, after having passed the probationary period, be appointed a clerk of class 2, and if he proves himself proficient in his duties and has made a satisfactory record, he shall, within a year after receiving his permanent appointment, be promoted to class 3, and shall not be further promoted unless there is a vacancy in a higher class; but if he is appointed to a crew of two, three, or four clerks, and continues to make a satisfactory record, then he shall be advanced one grade each year until he shall have reached the maximum class of the lowest grade in the car to which he is assigned, as hereinafter provided for.

"On lines upon which full railway post-office cars have not been authorized by the Postmaster General, where but one clerk to a car is appointed to perform the duties and who runs an average of 110 miles or more per day, he shall be of class 5.

"If the daily average of miles run is less than 110 and not less than 100, the clerk shall be of class 4; if less than 100 and not less than 90, the clerk shall be of class 3; if less than 90 and more than 80, the clerk shall be of class 2. If the average distance run is 80 miles or less the clerk shall be of class 1, and the salary shall not be less than $10 per annum for each mile of the daily average of miles run: Provided, That the clerks of these classes, assigned as above, are employed exclusively by the Post-Office Department.

"On lines upon which full railway post-office cars have not been authorized by the Postmaster-General, where more than one clerk is assigned to duty in a car, the additional clerks shall be of classes lower than the clerk in charge, except where the clerk in charge is of class 1, and in no case shall such additional clerks be of a class higher than class 4. Where helpers are assigned to duty on such lines they shall not be of a class higher than class 3.

"On lines upon which full railway post-office cars are run by the order of the Post-Office Department, and to which 2 clerks to a crew are assigned, there shall be 1 clerk of class 8 and 1 clerk of class 6 or lower, as hereinbefore provided for.

"On lines upon which full railway post-office cars are run by order of the Post-Office Department, and to which 3 clerks to a crew are assigned, there shall be 1 clerk of class 8, 1 clerk of class 6, and 1 clerk of class 5 or lower, as hereinbefore provided for.

"On lines upon which full railway post-office cars are run by order of the Post-Office Department, and to which 4 clerks to a crew are assigned, there shall be 1 clerk of class 8, 1 clerk of class 6, 1 clerk of class 5, and 1 clerk of class 4 or lower, as hereinbefore provided for.

"On lines upon which full railway post-office cars are run by order of the Post-Office Department, and to which 5 or more clerks to a crew are assigned, there shall be 1 clerk of class 8, 1 clerk of class 6, 1 clerk of class 5, 1 clerk of class 4, and others of class 3 or lower, as hereinbefore provided for.

"On lines where more than one distributing car is run in a train there shall be 2 additional clerks of class 6 for each additional distributing car.

"The clerk receiving the highest salary in any crew will be designated clerk in charge.

"Clerks employed on steamboat lines shall be of class 1; the salary to be determined by the amount of work to be performed and whether they are employed exclusively by the Post-Office Department.

"Clerks employed as porters in railway post-offices shall be of class 1 and shall be paid a salary not exceeding $600 per annum.

"The General Superintendent may, when necessary, detail clerks of such classes as the character of the work may indicate to duty at important railway junctions; such clerks to be designated as transfer clerks in charge and assistant transfer clerks; and it shall be their duty to look after the handling and transfer of mails at railroad depots and perform such other work pertaining to the Railway Mail Service as may be required of them. When more than one clerk is needed for such duty at the same depot, the additional clerks shall be of classes below class 7, but in no case shall more than one clerk of the same class, above class 3, be so detailed at the same depot.

"Such clerks as may be assigned to duty in charge of one or more lines shall be of class 9, and be designated as chief clerks, and shall, when traveling on business of the Department, be paid from the appropriations for the transportation of mails on railroads their actual and necessary expenses, but not exceeding $3 per diem.

"There shall be one clerk detailed to duty in the office of each division superintendent, who shall be designated assistant division superintendent, Railway Mail Service, and who shall act as division superintendent in the absence of that officer. Such clerk shall be of class 10, and shall, when traveling on the business of the Department, be paid from the appropriation for the transportation of mails on railroads his actual and necessary expenses, but not exceeding $3 per diem.

"There may be detailed to duty in the office of the General Superintendent and of each division superintendent of Railway Mail Service as many railway postal clerks, in the judgment of the General Superintendent, as may be necessary to transact the business of those offices properly; but there shall be but one clerk of class 10 detailed to duty in the office of each division superintendent.

"That all railway postal clerks whose duties require them to work six days or more per week, fifty-two weeks per year, shall be allowed an annual vacation of fifteen days with pay.

"No clerk shall receive less salary after the passage of this act than he was receiving prior thereto, and no clerk shall be reduced from a higher to a lower grade after his assignment thereto unless such salary or grade is properly reduced by reason of his inefficiency to perform the duties of such higher grade, unless temporarily reduced as a penalty for delinquency or misconduct, as hereinbefore provided for, or unless the status of the line to which he is assigned may be so changed by the reduction of mileage, withdrawal of full railway post-office cars, reduction of force, or otherwise, as to bring him within a different class, as provided in this act, or unless he be transferred from one line to another at his own request or in the interest of the public service."

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I want to renew my request for unanimous consent that this amendment be considered as pending, that an hour's debate be given to it, and at the end it be submitted to the House for its action.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that in view of the fact that this proposition has been given an hour for general discussion, that by having both propositions before the committee, the gentleman reserving the point of order he has made and I reserving the point of order on the paragraph which he has reported, the entire subject will be before the committee, and we will have an opportunity of considering the relative merits of those propositions. If the Chair strikes out the proposition which I have offered on the point of order, then the question will come up on the provision which the gentleman has reported in this bill.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is holding a post-mortem. We have commenced debate, and you have offered an amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserved the point of order pending the reading of the amendment.

Mr. LOUD. You did?

Mr. TAWNEY. And so stated to the Chair at the time of offering it.

Mr. LOUD. I stated that I insisted upon the point of order being determined.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. But it was not, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LOUD. Let us see what the Chairman says about that. The Chair does not hold that a point of order can be reserved when a gentlemen insists that it shall be determined.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course a point of order could not be reserved by the gentleman from Minnesota against the objection of the gentleman from California. It can only be reserved by unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not understand the gentleman from California objected when I said I reserved the point of order, when I offered my proposition as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California had insisted that the point of order should be determined, and thereupon the gentleman from Minnesota offered an amendment.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Did the Chairman decide the point of order then?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was not discussed at all. The gentleman submitted his amendment.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Was it decided?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman must have——

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair has not decided any point of order.

Mr. LOUD. What I thought I heard the gentleman say was that he withdrew it.

Mr. TAWNEY. No, no. Then, I ask the gentleman from California to reserve the point of order on the amendment until the expiration of the hour's discussion.

Mr. LOUD. Now, I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I am perfectly willing to do that on this amendment—the gentleman's proposition here to this section—if that is the last of it.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is all there is of it.

Mr. LOUD. The only object I have is that I would like to have it determined before we proceed to debate what we are going to vote upon; and if this is all the gentleman's proposition, I will reserve the point of order. I understand that is all of your proposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state to the gentleman from California that the amendment which I have offered is offered as a substitute for all that part of the paragraph which has been read after the word "each," in line 10, down to the end of that paragraph.

Mr. BINGHAM. On what page?

Mr. TAWNEY. On page 16 of the bill. The proposition which I have offered as a substitute is the reclassification bill, known as H. R. No. 2. That is the only proposition except, in the event that this should go into the bill, it would be necessary to change the figures on page 17 as to the aggregate appropriation.

Mr. LOUD. I want to suggest to the gentleman that there is one hour set aside for debate. Is the gentleman willing to divide that hour?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly; that is the proposition.

Mr. LOUD. I ask that the gentleman from Minnesota control one half of the time and I control the other half.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Minnesota moves to strike out all after the word "each," in line 10, to the end of the paragraph and substitute the amendment as read. Against that the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] reserves all points of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the two propositions now under consideration relate to the most important branch of our postal service—the railway postal clerks. In almost every city the telephone and messenger service have in a large degree taken the place of the postal service for local communication and the transmission of local messages. But for those who can not avail themselves of these more modern facilities, or whose business or interests demand the speedy transmission of mail matter, the highest possible efficiency in the railway postal service is of the utmost importance. No branch of the postal service has shown such marvelous development and progress in the last fifteen years as has this particular branch of that service.

This progress, this development, and the splendid Railway Mail Service we now have are due almost wholly to the intelligence, industry, and vitality of the men charged with the duty of handling our enormous mails while shut up in their railway post-offices, traveling at the highest possible rate of speed. In no Department of the Government service are the employees required to perform as many hours of continuous labor. In no Department of the Government service do employees assume the risk and danger assumed by railway postal clerks.

In no Department of the public service are the employees required to observe as strict rules and regulations, nor are they subjected to as severe discipline as they are in this service. In no Department of the Government service are the employees required to defray their expenses while traveling and away from their homes in the discharge of their duties, except in the Railway Mail Service. And in no Department of the Government service are employees denied the privileges of citizens by reason of their service, nor are they denied the comforts and pleasure of home and association with their families to the extent that these privileges are denied to the railway postal clerks.

For many years the Department and the railway postal clerks have asked Congress to take all these things into consideration and reclassify this service and readjust their salaries, so as to meet the growing demands of the service and reasonably compensate these men for the increased labor, the increased danger, incident to the demand of the people for the rapid transit of their mail.

Thus far their appeal has received no consideration whatever at the hands of Congress nor at the hands of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The proposition which I have offered as a substitute for the one reported by the committee has twice passed the Senate, but in both instances has it failed to receive any consideration at the hands of the House.

I assert here and now that there is no class of Government employees who are harder worked or poorer paid than the men who are employed in this particular branch of the service. And no other class of Government employees has ever asked for an increase in their compensation whose appeal has met with such universal approval on the part of the people and on the part of the public press as the appeal of these men. Almost every newspaper of any prominence throughout the country has given their request the most hearty editorial indorsement.

Twenty years ago any man of any clerical capacity or business ability could in a very brief space of time master the duties of a then so-called "route agent." It is different now. It takes a bright man, a man of good education. It requires years to acquire the requisite expertness to become an expert railway mail clerk under our present system. It is a hard life, exacting, and in a majority of cases slavish. The employees of the Government in the Executive Departments of this city go to their offices at 9 o'clock in the morning. They work until 12, when they are allowed one-half hour for luncheon. They return to their offices and continue their work until 4, and then are free to employ the remainder of their time during that day and until the next morning at 9 o'clock as they may see fit. When they reach the offices in the morning they are clean; papers are all properly arranged; they have nothing to do but commence the discharge of their routine duties.

When the hour of 4 o'clock arrives they leave their desks, and laborers and messengers see to it that their offices are put in proper condition for them to resume the discharge of their duties on the following morning. It is not so with the railway postal clerk. He goes into his car, combining the laborer and, in intelligence, the highest type of the clerical force of the Government. He has no one to handle his heavy sacks of mail for him. He has no one to clean up his car when he leaves it. That duty, by the rules and regulations, he must perform himself. He must even take care of every particle of scrap paper as he goes along in the discharge of his duties, putting it into a sack and then sorting it when he reaches his destination.

In hundreds of instances they are required to do continuous work for twenty hours, and then, with only a short rest, start back on the return trip. In addition to all of his labor, in addition to the mental and physical strain upon him, when on duty, occasioned by the rapid and swaying motion of the train, he must, during his lay-off periods, apply himself to study in order to familiarize himself for the better discharge of his duties in this service.

A first-class clerk must be an expert, and in his periodical examinations must average 98 per cent or better in order to hold his position. These examinations include full knowledge of all rail and star routes within his district, of all railroad connections, on whatever lines mail matter will reach its destination the quickest; the name and location of every post-office in his district, which comprises in many instances from three to twenty-five States and Territories. In addition to all this, within the past two years he has been charged with the duty of making up mail in his car for distribution in our large cities, so that when the mail arrives in the city of Washington, for instance, all mail to be delivered in a certain carrier's district, or at a certain station or substation, must be ready for the carrier.

The proposition which I have offered as a substitute is the bill known as H. R. 2, or the reclassification bill, which has been recommended for passage by the Postmaster-General during the Administration of Mr. Cleveland, and has been repeatedly recommended for passage by the Postmaster-General under our present Administration. It also has the united support of every railway postal clerk in the United States. It deals justly by these men, who, in addition to their unremitting toil and never-ending study of the "schemes," instructions, and regulations, are under bonds as the temporary custodians of vast values, and for this reason the proposition should, in my judgment, be incorporated in this bill as a substitute for the one proposed by the committee.

It does not discriminate against any railway postal clerk or against any class of these employees, as does the proposition of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD]. It does not increase the salaries of a few, allowing the salaries of the remainder to stand where they were fixed almost twelve years ago, when this service was comparatively in its infancy, when a full railway post-office was unknown, when there were not to exceed five men in any railway postal crew, while to-day we have solid postal trains with five and six full post-office cars and crews numbering as high as twenty-five men.

The proposition reported by the committee and which is now urged by the distinguished chairman [Mr. LOUD] is unjust, inequitable, and will necessarily tend to create dissatisfaction and demoralize the service. This is so because he arbitrarily subdivides two classes, increasing the salaries of a portion of each of these classes and denies any increase whatever to the remainder of these two classes. The men in these classes all perform the same duties, they run over the same route, they travel the same distance, and to increase the salary of one and not the other will inevitably lead to dissatisfaction and result in injury to the service.

In opening the debate on this appropriation bill on Monday the chairman of the committee [Mr. LOUD], knowing that this was one of the most serious objections to his proposition, undertook to make the House believe that this would not be its effect. I hope the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads will remain, as I intend to call attention to a statement he made yesterday as to the effect of this provision in relation to railway postal clerks and the increase of their salaries. This is not a question of sentiment. If it was, we could confidently appeal to the extra hazardous character of their employment, the large number of clerks annually injured or killed in the service, and the loss of the many comforts and pleasures of home and family which they sustain, in support of that question. It is a question of justice and right, and therefore we need rely only upon the facts to justify our position. I shall appeal to the judgment of this House and not to sentiment.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] interrupted the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] and asked him concerning the effect of this particular provision, and wanted to know whether or not it was his understanding that this provision increased the salaries of the railway postal clerks all along the line, or whether it discriminated in favor of some and against others. This was the answer of the gentleman from California:

> The promotion of those 748 clerks from the $1,300 class to the $1,400 class makes substantially the same increase down along the whole line—perhaps not in the exact number; that I can not say. This is a very intricate question. I do not suppose anyone outside the General Superintendent and his assistant could give exactly the number. But the bill provides for a general lifting up along the whole line—that is, if you lift up the top the rest must follow.

Then, he says the increased appropriation for railway postal clerks is about $900,000.

Now, from this statement I take it that the distinguished chairman of the committee in charge of this bill intended to do substantial justice to all classes of the Railway Mail Service, and I confidently hope and expect that when it is shown to him conclusively, as it can be, that instead of increasing the salaries of the railway postal clerks by $900,000, the increase is only $140,000, and that when he says he is lifting up all the railway postal clerks, he is benefiting only 21 per cent at the expense of the remaining 79 per cent, he will then consent to the proposition I have offered and which will accomplish what he says he and his committee intended to accomplish by this provision in the bill.

He also repeated that same statement in answer to a question put to him by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], and I submit to him and to the committee that unintentionally he has misled the members of this House in respect to the actual effect of his provision. As a matter of fact, as I have said, he increases the appropriation of salaries of railway postal clerks only $140,000 instead of about $900,000.

[Here the committee rose to receive a message from the Senate.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying when the committee rose, if the distinguished chairman of the committee intended to increase the appropriation for the railway postal clerks, as he said in his speech on Monday last, $965,000——

Mr. LOUD. "The gentleman from California" did not make any such statement, and the gentleman from Minnesota has no right to misinterpret any remark that I made.

Mr. TAWNEY. I read from the RECORD of April 23, page 4565, in which this statement was made by the chairman of the committee:

> The increase for railway mail clerks this year is $965,000.

Mr. LOUD. That is very true, but not the increase of salaries. Do not misinterpret me.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not say for salaries. I will read further what the gentleman said:

> In this segregation that we have made there is probably about $500,000 for increase of salaries of the railway mail clerks.

Mr. LOUD. I said that.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman intended to give or believed that he was giving this increase of $500,000 for increased salaries, and if he believed that he was increasing the salaries, as he said, "all along the line," I repeat that if he can be convinced that his provision will not accomplish either of these two results, then, being, as I know him to be, a fair-minded man, he ought to accept the proposition I have offered, for that will accomplish both results.

Now, let us see whether the gentleman has increased this appropriation $500,000 for increase of salaries of these clerks. Here is an analysis of that provision of the appropriation bill prepared by the statistician in the Railway Mail Service, which I will print as part of my remarks.

Average increase under H. R. 10301 is $15.31.
Average increase under H. R. 2 is $150.97.

According to this, there are 11 assistant division superintendents whose salaries are increased $200 per annum. I also see that the salaries of 85 chief clerks in charge of lines are increased $200 per annum. I find that a portion of class 5, a class fixed by existing law, have their salaries increased $100, the exact number being 748. I find, too, that a portion of class 4, a classification fixed by law, have their salaries increased $50, and the aggregate number receiving an increase of salary is 938. I also find that there is not one man in the Railway Mail Service who will derive any benefit whatever in the way of increase of salary except these. So that there is no general lifting up of salaries "all along the line," as he says, by reason of the increase of salaries of a part of class 5 and a part of class 4. There can be none, for the simple reason that the present classification is fixed by law, which reads as follows:

That persons in the Railway Mail Service known as railway post-office clerks, route agents, local agents, and mail-route messengers shall, on and after the passage of this act, be designated as railway postal clerks, and divided into five classes, whose salaries shall not exceed the following rates per annum: First class, not exceeding $800; second class, not exceeding $900; third class, not exceeding $1,000; fourth class, not exceeding $1,200, and fifth class, not exceeding $1,400.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the present classification, and the salary for each class is likewise fixed by law.

The gentleman pretends to justify his action and will in his reply say that some years ago, because of a deficiency in the appropriation, class 5 did not receive the maximum salary, and that he now proposes to remedy this. In doing this he claims also that he is lifting up all below class 5.

But in order to accomplish that what does he do? By this provision he makes an arbitrary classification. He subdivides class 4 and class 5, which is new legislation, and is just as obnoxious to the rule of this House as the amendment I have offered. There is no "class 5a" or "class 5b" under existing law. There is no "class 4a" and no "class 4b." In these two classes there are a little over 2,800 railway postal clerks. He increases the salaries of about 1,700, and he allows 1,100 or more in the same classes to continue to work at the salary they are now receiving.

As an administrative officer, sir, as a legislator, I appeal to him to say whether in his judgment it is for the interest of the service to discriminate in favor of 1,700 men of a given class and against 1,100 men of the same class?

His proposition is clearly a discrimination in favor of a part of class 4 and class 5. There are no other employees in the railway postal service except the office force who will derive a particle of benefit from the passage of the proposition reported by the committee. This is necessarily so for the reason that the salaries and classifications are fixed by law. The General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service can not "boost up" a man in one class unless there is a vacancy in a higher class.

The proposition of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] does not take anybody out of class 5. It does not take anybody out of class 4. It allows those two classes to remain as they are to-day. It is true he increases the salary of those whom the gentleman arbitrarily calls class 5b and class 4b, but he does not change their present classification. This provision, therefore, can not increase the salary of any clerk in the lower classes until they are transferred from the lower to the higher classes. The proposition of the gentleman [Mr. LOUD] does not and can not affect the salary of any man in the service, except those specifically named or those in classes 4b and 5b.

The proposition, therefore, does not accomplish what the gentleman declared upon the floor of this House to be his purpose. He did not explain or pretend to explain how it was possible for the General Superintendent of the Railway Postal Service to increase salaries of men in classes 3, 2, or 1 or how it was possible for him to increase the salaries of those in classes 4 and 5, whose salaries he does not propose to increase.

This proposition, therefore, I say does not accomplish what the gentleman from California seeks to accomplish. If he is sincere in the statement which he made on the floor of the House on Monday, he should accept my amendment, which does increase the salaries all along the line.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I call attention to what the Second Assistant Postmaster-General himself has said in regard to this proposition. Before quoting what he has said I want to state that the proposition I have offered as an amendment has been recommended by the Post-Office Department, and the railway postal clerks have for years endeavored to secure its enactment into law.

They came here in the Fifty-third Congress, they came again in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and their bill was reported to this House, but it could not receive consideration because there was a great deficit in the Treasury at that time. They returned in the Fifty-fifth Congress, backed by all their superior officers, but the war with Spain came on and the necessities of the Government for revenue were so great that the railway postal clerks, in a spirit of patriotism, returned to the discharge of their duties without further pressing their claims in that Congress.

In 1898 the Second Assistant Postmaster-General incorporated in his report the bill which I have offered as a substitute for the committee provision, and he accompanied it with the most hearty and favorable commendation.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman who has charge of the bill says that if these assistant division superintendents and chief clerks are promoted, it makes vacancies below them, and thereby in that way lifts up the entire list. Now, can that be done unless you fill up at the bottom with new or different men?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly not; but the mistake the gentleman makes there——

Mr. LOUD. I had hoped that the gentleman from Minnesota would correct the gentleman from Georgia, so that I would not be called on to do it.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to say that the proposition contained in this appropriation bill does not contemplate the promotion from one class to another of any of the men in the Railway Postal Service. They continue to perform their duties in the classes in which they now are; and if this proposition passes, they will remain in those classes just as now. The only difference will be that 748 men in class 5b will receive an increase of $100, and 938 men, I think, in class 4b will receive an annual increase of $50. It does not permit any man——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then it makes no vacancies.

Mr. TAWNEY. It makes no vacancies; and there can be no "lifting up" of the classes below 4 and 5, because nobody is taken out of either one of those two upper classes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General in his last report says, concerning the substitute which I offer for the provisions contained in the appropriation bill:

Reorganization and reclassification.—The bill for the reclassification of the clerks of the Railway Mail Service, which has been before Congress for some time and is referred to at length in the report of the General Superintendent, should appeal more strongly than ever to the favorable action of Congress at its coming session. The last reorganization occurred in 1881.

Many important changes have occurred in the service since that date. Present salaries are not equitably adjusted to the nature of the work performed. Higher grades of work call for additional classes to secure proper supervision. In comparing salaries and compensation of the clerical force it must be remembered that salaries of railway postal clerks include the per diem or travel pay. The net compensation, after deducting extraordinary expenses of travel, is in many cases inadequate to support their families and properly educate their children. As a result, applications for transfer to clerical positions in the Department and in the local post-office are numerous and pressing.

Notwithstanding the increased cost of living in a large city, railway postal clerks are willing to accept transfer at a reduction of from $100 to $250 per year in salary. Several such transfers have been made to this office within the past year. Clerks in local positions are at home with their families. They avoid the risks incident to exposed travel; save wear and tear of clothes and other incidental expenses. In foreign countries a specific allowance is made to all officials and clerks who travel. In Great Britain railway postal clerks are taken chiefly from the London office, and when under such detail receive from 30 to 80 per cent increase in salary.

Mark! When they are taken out of the London post-office and put upon the road to discharge the duties which our railway postal clerks are discharging, they are given an increase in salary of from 30 to 80 per cent, which shows how the labor in this branch of the postal service is regarded in comparison with the labor in the office by European countries, and should be regarded by the American Government.

In France a specific allowance for travel expenses ranges from $140 to $300 a year, which amounts to from 15 to 40 per cent increase in their regular salaries. In Germany a graduated allowance is made based on the number of miles traveled, number of hours at lie-over points, etc. Indeed, in the case of all other Government officials and clerks in this country the necessary traveling expenses are provided for by an allowance of from $2 to $4 per day.

Not a dollar is allowed to a railway postal clerk for travel subsistence, although when he is on duty he is away from home half the time, incurring the same expenses that other employees of the Government incur; but he is not reimbursed for a dollar of that expense, while every other employee of the Government who goes out of his office, and performs duties outside of that office, is reimbursed for the expenses incurred incident thereto. Not so with our railway postal clerks. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General further says:

If the present salaries of our clerks seem higher than those prevailing in foreign countries, it must be remembered that the amount of work performed by 1 clerk in our service equals the work of 2 and sometimes of nearly 3 clerks in European countries. For instance, the number of railway post-office cars reported in France is 468, and the number of clerks performing service in them 2,852, an average of over 6 clerks per car. As compared with this, in our country we have 7,662 railway postal clerks performing the service in 3,506 cars and apartments, an average of 2.18 clerks per car.

Contrasted, Mr. Chairman, either in regard to the amount of compensation or in regard to the amount of labor required there are no postal clerks in the service of any civilized country to-day who receive less compensation, deducting the expenses which they must necessarily incur, than the railway postal clerks of the United States. I have here a statement showing just what the average salaries are.

The average salary of each one of the 9,061 clerks under the proposed bill—that is, the estimates for the next fiscal year (the proposition which I have submitted is based on the needs of the service for the next fiscal year)—is $1,037.43, and the average salary under the provision presented by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] is $1,060.91, while under the proposition which I have submitted as a substitute for this proposition the average salary will be only $1,175.35. So that under the reclassification proposed by the committee the average annual salary would be $23.48 more than they are now receiving, while under the proposition which I have submitted as a substitute the average salary would be $114 more than under the committee's proposition and only $137.92 more than they are now receiving.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these statements are all verified by the statement furnished by the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service and prepared by the statistician of that Department, which is the statement I have before referred to. It was prepared at my request for the purpose of analyzing and enabling members of this House to fully understand both propositions and then determine from the facts which of the two is the more just, which of the two provides for an equitable division of the appropriation made by the Government for the purpose of compensating them for their services.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will it interrupt the gentleman for me to make a request at this time?

Mr. Chairman, in view of the interest we all take in this matter, and the fact that a great deal is being presented that will be of value to the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads when this matter comes before that committee for consideration, I ask unanimous consent that the time for discussion of the proposed amendment shall be extended one hour, half an hour to be controlled on each side by the same gentlemen that have the control of the debate that has already been agreed to.

Mr. LOUD. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman will not insist on that. I will yield to the gentleman part of the time that I have. I do not care to beat the air myself particularly, and I will yield a great deal of my share of the time to gentlemen to speak in reference to an amendment that they know can not pass.

Mr. BROMWELL. Whether it can pass or not, it is a matter of a great deal of importance to others.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to get through with this bill before Friday. The gentleman knows that Friday will be wanted for pensions.

Mr. BROMWELL. I have no doubt that we will get to a vote to-morrow.

Mr. LOUD. I fear from the way that we are progressing that we will not get through before next winter.

Mr. BROMWELL. I would like to have my request submitted, but from what the gentleman says it seems he will object; but I renew my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend the time for debate on this paragraph one hour, thirty minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota and thirty minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from California. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed fifteen minutes' time in addition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he be allowed fifteen minutes in addition.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope my colleague will not ask that. I think he can get all the time he wants from the gentleman from California.

Mr. LOUD. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he be allowed fifteen minutes in addition to the time already given. Is there objection?

Mr. LOUD. I shall not object if the House wants to extend the time for a month. That is for the House to determine. If you want to sit on this bill all summer, that is for the House to determine.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, in order to make clear to the members of the Committee the difference between the proposed reclassification of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads and the proposition proposed by the Department and the railway mail clerks, I will restate what I said a moment ago relative to the effect of the committee bill. That it increases the salaries of 11 superintendents, $200; 85 chief clerks in charge of lines, $200; 740 clerks of class 5, $100, and 938 clerks of class 4, $50. Out of a total of 9,107 railway postal clerks this provision will benefit 2,800 of them.

Under the proposition which I have submitted you would increase the salaries of class 10, the chief clerks in charge of lines, $200; class 9, $200, and there are only 105 in this class; class 8, $200; there are 1,207 in that class; class 6—and I wish to say here that I omit class 7, because there are no employees in class 7 at this time. The proposition which the Department proposes, and which the railway postal clerks favor, is to create another class, to meet an emergency that has existed for a long time—namely, the appointment of transfer clerks in our large cities; and they propose that these transfer clerks shall hereafter be designated as class 7 instead of being known as transfer clerks. Then class 6 is increased $150; there are 1,632 in this class. Class 5, one of the hardest-worked classes in the service, where there is only one man to a car, and a class in which there are 3,251, the increase is $200.

Class 4, the increase is $100, and there are 793 in that class. Class 3, the increase is $100, and there are 1,320 in that class. Class 2 and class 1, their salary is not increased at all, for the reason that in the judgment of the Department and the clerks the salary fixed by law for these two classes is an adequate compensation for the service they render upon entering the service. So that under this provision we benefit 91 per cent of all the clerks, while under the committee's provision we benefit only 21 per cent. We benefit, in other words, under the provision which I have submitted, all the employees in the Railway Postal Service who, in the judgment of the Department and in the opinion of the clerks themselves, are entitled to any increase of salary; while under the committee's proposition we discriminate in favor of one-third and against the remaining two-thirds.

Now, what is the aggregate result? The aggregate amount of this appropriation reported by the committee is $9,761,300, and in the proposed division of that appropriation among these clerks we will injure the service by discriminating against 79 per cent of the men in that arm of the service. Under the amendment I have offered we would divide that appropriation equitably and do justice to all of them, and then only make their average salary $1,175.43. This would increase the appropriation only $1,235,880 over the amount proposed by the committee.

Mr. GAINES. Why do they make this invidious distinction between the 91 per cent and the 21 per cent?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not explain to the gentleman why they make the invidious distinction that he refers to.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL. It has been some time since I looked over this part of the bill which the gentleman offers as a substitute, and so I am not as familiar with its provisions as I ought to be. I see on page 2 it says that promotions shall be based solely upon efficiency, faithfulness, and good conduct, and the clerk must serve at least six months in each class, etc. Before that I find there is to be a probationary appointment of six months in the lowest class—class 1. Now, at the end of six months does the bill provide that, having served his probation, he shall then be promoted to class 2?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. BROMWELL. And at the end of another probationary period he shall be promoted to the next—class 3?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; he may be, but he would not be entitled to the second promotion at the expiration of that period as a matter of right.

Mr. BROMWELL. But beyond class 3 he shall not be promoted unless there are vacancies?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is as I understand it.

Mr. BROMWELL. Now, what would be the effect of this if there were no deaths or removals in class 3? Will it not require the appointment of new clerks in classes 1 and 2 to fill the vacancies caused by promotions of those in classes 1 and 2 to class 3? In other words, will there be a lot of supernumerary appointments in the two lowest classes to take the place of promotions into class 3?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; that is not my understanding. I asked the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service this morning and he informs me that will not be the effect of it; that when the promotions are made in the higher classes, these men, if there are many in the lower classes, will be promoted into the higher classes from classes 1 and 2, and when vacancies occur in classes 1 and 2, they will fill them by examination as they fill all other positions under this bill.

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman will recognize the difference between classes from 3 up and classes 1 and 2. From 3 up there can not be a transfer from the lower classes unless there is a vacancy. Classes 1 and 2, on the other hand, are on probationary service that entitles them to promotion. Now, in case there are only a few vacancies in classes 3 and above, and a large number in classes 1 and 2, will not the result be that you will double classes 1 and 2 by the transfers into upper classes and make it necessary to put new men into classes 1 and 2 where the service does not require it?

Mr. TAWNEY. Superintendent White assures me that the bill does not operate in that way.

But, however that may be, I feel quite confident that the committee of this House will be justified in relying upon the judgment of the Department, and that the Department and the clerks having worked out this reclassification to their satisfaction, we may confidently accept their judgment.

Mr. HOPKINS. As I understand, the increase of salaries provided for in this appropriation bill has not been recommended by the Department, and does not represent the wishes of the clerks.

Mr. TAWNEY. It has been recommended by the Department for the last three years. I mean this substitute offered by myself has the full and entire approval of the Department.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am talking about the bill presented by the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; that is not recommended by the Department.

Mr. HOPKINS. The substitute offered by you has been approved of by the Department and by the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; the bill offered by me was incorporated in the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's report in 1898, and referred to again with approval in the report of 1899.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is it not a fact that it meets with the approval of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, and men all along the line?

Mr. TAWNEY. All of them, every one of them, from class 10 down. I want to call attention to a statement which was made by the chairman of the committee on Monday, that by this segregation the aggregate increase of salary is $500,000.

To explain this I would invite your attention to this remarkable fact: In order to make it appear that he was giving an aggregate increase of $500,000, the gentleman includes the salaries of the General Superintendent, of the assistant general superintendent, of the chief clerk in the office of the General Superintendent, the division superintendent, the assistant division superintendent, all of which salaries have heretofore been paid out of the fund for the transportation of the mail by railroads—never before included in the general appropriation bill. The gentleman includes $148,400 heretofore paid out of the fund for transportation of the mail, and then on the floor of this House undertakes to charge that amount to the railway postal clerks as an increase of salary.

Now, the chairman of the committee said a moment ago that he "did not want to beat the air." Yes, as a friend near me suggests, he wanted to "beat" the railway mail clerks instead of beating the air. I suppose he referred to the fact that the Chairman of this committee would rule this proposition out of order. On that point I call the attention of members of the House to this fact: He knows as well as I do—as well as the Chairman of this Committee of the Whole and other members of this House—that his proposition is as obnoxious to the rule as the proposition which I have offered.

I want to ask the members of this House whether it is a greater crime for a member sitting in his committee room to violate the rule in order to discriminate against about 7,000 railway postal clerks for the sake of benefiting only 1,700 than it is for us, sitting in Committee of the Whole, to violate the rule of the House in order to do absolute and complete justice to all of them. Wherein is the distinction? That rule is violated by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and by the Appropriations Committee every time they incorporate in an appropriation bill a provision which is either new legislation or which increases appropriations beyond the amount fixed by law. That is done in this very provision. That is why I wanted to reserve the point of order on the paragraph and thereby put both propositions before the House in order that members might determine which of the two was the more equitable, the more just, and calculated to benefit the service most.

But the gentleman refused me that opportunity. I was therefore forced to abandon the point of order, so as to get any consideration of this proposition at all. And I think that if we vote to put my amendment in the bill as a substitute for his proposition, we are simply voting to strike out something which is as obnoxious to the rule as the substitute and to put something in its place that is infinitely better. I claim, Mr. Chairman, that that rule is no more sacred in this House or in the Committee of the Whole than it is in the committee rooms of the House; and if the committee can violate the rule with impunity, I can not see why we can not violate it when we see that an absolute injustice is being done by the violation of the rule in the committee room.

I want to call attention, further, to this remarkable fact: The chairman of the committee stated on Monday in his opening address that the railway postal clerks were the best paid men in the service of the Government. We all know the discomforts and hardships they must endure; we are aware of the danger and risk they assume. It is not necessary for me to dwell on this branch of the question to prove the unusual character of their employment. This is not a question of sentiment; it is a question of justice and equity, and a question of business. Let us examine the provisions of the bill reported by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] and ascertain whether his own bill will sustain his assertion that the railway postal clerks are the best paid men in the Government service. Here are 14,032 assorters in the post-offices, general-delivery clerks, inquiry clerks, supply clerks, paper distributers, etc., all allowed a salary of $1,000 a year by this appropriation bill—only $175 less than the average salary the railway postal clerks would receive under my amendment.

Here are 500 assorters, general-delivery clerks—men who stand at the general-delivery window and hand out the mail—who receive $1,100 annual salary, only $75 less than the average salary paid under this proposed amendment of mine to the railway postal clerks; 692 assorters, general-delivery clerks, inquiry clerks, etc., including stenographers, $1,200 year—$25 more than the salary of the railway postal clerk, the employee who takes his life in his hand when he shuts himself up in a box car to perform the service which the Government requires when out on his railroad run.

Mr. GAINES. Day and night, too.

Mr. TAWNEY. Day and night at that.

Here are 178 dispatchers, mailing clerks, including stenographers, at $1,300—$125 more than the average salary paid to the railway postal clerks.

The gentleman also provides for 125 dispatchers, letter distributers, mailing clerks, etc., including stenographers, $1,400; and then he provides for 58 stamp clerks, including stenographers, at an annual salary of $1,600. Compare the salary services and the hours of employment of the employees of the Post-Office, which the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] has provided for so bountifully in his bill, with the salary, service, and nature of employment of the railway mail clerk, or make the comparison in other lines of employment, and the injustice of the Government toward these clerks will be still more manifest.

Take the run from Chicago to Minneapolis, a distance of 423 miles, on train 57. On that train railway postal clerks commence work in the yards at Chicago at 1 p. m., and finish in Minneapolis the following day at 9 a. m. Total hours continous labor, 20. They are then off duty 7 hours. Returning on train 56, clerks commence work at yards at Minneapolis at 4 p. m.; finish at Chicago the following day at 8 a. m. Total hours continuous duty, 15. This constitutes a round trip, and requires 35 hours of work, consuming 3 days' time, for which clerks receive, fifth class, $10.80; fourth class, $9.60; third class, $8.25.

Engineers, of which there are four changes on same runs, are employed 11 hours on train 57, and 13 hours on train 56, for which they receive $3.70 per hundred miles, or $31.22 for the round trip, embracing 24 hours active labor, while the highest grade clerk receives but $10.80 for the same period, notwithstanding he was on duty 11 hours longer.

Train 58, clerks commence duty at Minneapolis at 12 m.; finish the following day at Chicago at 3 a. m. Hours employed, 15. Off duty 18 hours, returning on train 55.

Train 55. Clerks commence work in yards at Chicago at 9 p. m. and finish at Minneapolis the following day at 4 p. m. Hours on duty, 19. Total time for round trip, 34 hours. Highest compensation, $10.80. Engineers on same runs are employed 12 hours on train 58 and 12 hours and 50 minutes on train 55. Total hours employed on round trip, 24 hours and 50 minutes. Compensation for same, $31.22. This, bear in mind, is time actually employed on the road, and does not include time off duty devoted to study, making out reports, checking up schemes, checking up receipts for registered matter handled, or preparing slips for next tour of duty.

This requires on an average about 2½ hours of each day off duty. This average will apply to nearly all clerks in the service.

COMPARISON WITH DEPARTMENT CLERKS.

A railway postal clerk on an average trunk line works 14 hours per day one-half the time; that is, he is on the road one-half the time and lays off half the time, or he works, including Sundays, 7 hours per day for 365 days in the year.

In addition to this he is obliged to keep up on his distribution and be prepared to do his work properly.

A Department clerk is allowed 52 Sundays, 7 holidays, 30 days' leave of absence, and 30 days' sick leave. If he uses only half of his sick leave, he will then have for his own purposes 99 days out of the 365. A railway postal clerk works 7 hours per day for 365 days—2,555 hours. Two and one-half hours per day (time off duty) preparing for case examinations, making reports of work done and irregularities that occur on his run, checking up records of registered matter handled, correcting schemes, examining order books, preparing supplies for the next term of duty, 182 days, or a total of 3,010 hours per year.

A Department clerk works 7 hours per day for 267 days, or 1,869 hours per year. A railway postal clerk works 1,141 hours (or 163 days) per year more than the Department clerk, or a year and a half more than his more fortunate brother.

In view of all these facts, how can any man justify paying an office stenographer who works 7 hours a day $1,600, and then deny to the railway postal clerk, who works continuously 20 hours a day, when on duty, an average annual salary of $1,175 a year. [Applause.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I give notice now that when the bill comes into the House I shall ask for a yea-and-nay vote on an amendment which affects the eight-hour system as applied to the letter carriers.

In the first session of the Fiftieth Congress the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads reported and Congress passed almost unanimously an act to limit the hours that letter carriers in cities shall be employed per day. The following is the language of that act:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That hereafter eight hours will constitute a day's work for all letter carriers in cities or postal districts connected therewith, for which they shall receive the same pay as is now paid for a day's work of a greater number of hours. If any letter carrier is employed a greater number of hours per day than eight, he shall be paid extra for the same in proportion to the salary now fixed by law.

This act became a law on May 24, 1888. Notwithstanding the expressed wish of Congress, as contained in this act, that the hours of labor of this branch of our Government service should be limited to eight per day, the letter carriers did not immediately enjoy the benefits of its provisions because the Post-Office Department, through its officers, in defiance of the expressed will of Congress, deliberately set the act aside.

This defiance was clothed in subterfuges and in misconstruction of the law. They compelled the letter carriers to go to the courts for a judicial definition of the language of the act. The effort to misconstrue the act has cost this Government up to date more than $3,000,000 in overtime claims paid by the United States for time that the letter carriers were forced to work in excess of eight hours per day.

The letter carriers did not appreciate in any way the advantages that apparently came to them because of these large claims. It was the only means within their power whereby an observance of the law could be enforced. Notwithstanding the plain language of the act and the intention of Congress so ably expressed in its consideration as to what was really meant to be accomplished, the ingenuity and skill of the very best talent that the Department could command was employed for years to prevent the operation of the law. That great statesman, since deceased, whose sincerity of purpose in relieving the condition of the letter carriers so endeared his memory to every letter carrier of the United States that they bow with reverence at the mention of his name.

His keen perception and accurate knowledge of the law was shown in this measure, which his own hand drew. It has stood the test of all these years of assault, and no judicial tribunal before whom it has been brought has placed any but the plain construction upon it which he intended it to convey. This was the work and might be said to be part of the crowning efforts of the life of the late Samuel S. Cox.

From 1888, when this act was placed upon our statute book, until 1894, no attempt had been made by the Post-Office Department to observe its provisions, hence the accumulation of the excessive time for which the $3,000,000 already referred to has been paid.

In 1894 an imperative order was issued by the Postmaster-General forbidding the accumulation of overtime by letter carriers and fixing as a penalty that any officer of the Post-Office Department who permitted overtime to be made would be liable to dismissal from the service. This effectually stopped the accumulation of overtime, showing conclusively that the overtime which had previously accumulated was through the connivance and with the knowledge of the officers of the service who, prior to the order referred to, were not made responsible in any way for it.

By their direction, letter carriers working nine and ten hours per day were compelled to falsify the records of the Department to make it appear that they were only working eight hours per day. When, by order of the Court of Claims, a judicial investigation was made of the records, and the testimony of the officers of the Department in the respective cities was taken under oath, it showed plainly that the records had been falsified with the knowledge and through the connivance of those officers.

After all this experience and just at the time when the letter carriers were being permitted to enjoy the benefits of this eight-hour law, again the Department, through its officers, want to disturb this condition by repealing virtually this eight-hour law and substituting in its stead what is termed a forty-eight hour a week law. This, too, is being done by misrepresentation to the members of this House, by the statements made concerning the amendment and by the methods employed to secure its adoption. They show that the proposed change can not stand investigation. During the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill yesterday, and while the following provision of this bill was under consideration, quoting from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, this transpired:

The Clerk read as follows:

"For pay of letter carriers in new offices entitled to free-delivery service under existing law, $60,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

"After the word 'dollars,' in line 25, page 12, add 'Provided, That letter carriers may be required to work not exceeding forty-eight hours during the six days of each week, and such number of hours on Sundays as may be required by the needs of the service. And if a legal holiday shall occur on any working day the service performed on said day shall be counted as eight hours, without regard to the time actually employed. If any letter carrier is employed for a greater number of hours than forty-eight during the working days in any week, he shall be paid extra for the same in proportion to the salary fixed by law.'"

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I wish to inquire whether this applies to all post-offices?

Mr. LOUD. It does; and my understanding is that the letter carriers themselves have agreed that this will be an improvement in the method of managing the business of the carrier service, by reason of the fact that on some days the mail is extremely heavy and on other days quite light. This would permit the working of the carriers eight and one-half or nine hours a day; but it is provided that they shall not work more than forty-eight hours during a week. The result would be, as suggested to me by many carriers, that on Saturdays, when the business in our cities is light, they would probably get the afternoon to themselves, that being a short working day of perhaps only four or five hours.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the amendment has been offered if it carries the remedy suggested by the gentleman from California. The reason I asked the question is because the amendment is made to a clause in the bill applying to letter carriers in new offices.

Mr. LOUD. My understanding is that it applies to all of the letter carriers. I ask a vote.

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I agree with the gentleman that that provision was passed yesterday without sufficient consideration, and I do not think it would have been passed if it had been properly considered.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I should have raised the point of order against it if I had been present. I was at work in the Committee on Labor.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman propose to ask a separate vote on that provision?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I trust the gentleman will do so.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Now, in this manner it is proposed to attach to this bill an amendment which has no relevancy whatever to the measure under consideration and, if adopted, will virtually repeal the existing statute enacted by the Fiftieth Congress providing eight hours a day for the work of all letter carriers in the United States.

If this measure had any merit, why was it not made a separate bill? Then hearings could have been given and evidence taken as to its necessity. An opportunity would also have been afforded of placing upon record those who favored this backward step in that great eight hour a day movement, approved by many of the best men in this country. Why adopt such methods as this? Was it to disguise the real purpose of those who seek to promote such legislation? What consistency is there in the rule of this House that has excluded from consideration, in connection with this appropriation bill, many important amendments that were germane to its provisions on the mere point of order that they were new legislation, and would at the same time permit of the adoption of this amendment, which is not only new legislation but repeals an existing statute law.

The provisions of this amendment are also vague and indefinite, as is shown by the fact that while the hours of labor for letter carriers are limited to the forty-eight hours provided for the six working days of each week, no limit of hours is provided for Sunday work, except as the language of this amendment prescribes: "And such number of hours on Sunday as may be required by the needs of the service."

And again, too, the vagueness of the provisions of this amendment is found in its provisions for the work to be performed on a legal holiday that may occur on any working day. This is the language of the amendment:

> And if a legal holiday shall occur on any working day the service performed on said day shall be counted as eight hours without regard to the time actually employed.

Hence it will be seen that on Sunday or legal holidays there is no limit fixed by the provisions of this amendment to which letter carriers might not be employed.

While no reasons have been given to the House for this radical change, a hurried inquiry elicits the information that the basis for it is the large amount of time not consumed by letter carriers in the performance of duty each day, and which can not be overcome under the existing statutes because of the infrequency and lack of uniformity in the burdens of mail matter creating what are termed light days and heavy days in the letter-carrier service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Very well.

Mr. COWHERD. Has the gentleman any information on the statement which was made that this was advocated and wanted by the carriers themselves?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I challenge any man to produce one letter carrier in the United States who says that he desires this amendment—one man.

This created what are termed "light days" and "heavy days" in the letter-carrier service. This theory as to loss of time to the Government because of lack of work is very much exaggerated, if not purposely misrepresented. It is not due in any sense to the necessity for more latitude in the application of the law which causes this accumulation of undertime.

It is chargeable more directly to the pernicious practice that has grown up of permitting some favored few in every office to enjoy the advantages of having light districts to cover while others, and they are in the great majority, are burdened to the fullest extent of their capacity. The amendment will extend the opportunity of further favoritism in the interests of those who are to be favored, and at the expense of those who have always been required to perform their full task. This is shown conclusively in the evidence submitted in support of this amendment, where the average undertime of all the carriers employed in each city is submitted.

If investigated it will show that the great proportion of that undertime was chargeable to the restricted duties required of some few, while the others are employed every minute of the time permitted by law. If there is any remedy needed to secure the use to the Government of this undertime, why not secure it through a readjustment of the service required from each individual letter carrier at the office where he is employed? There is not an office in this country to-day where letter carriers are employed, and where undertime has accumulated, or where mail has been returned for lack of time to complete a delivery, that all this could not be overcome by a readjustment of the districts apportioned to each letter carrier.

What will be the effect of this amendment upon the service so far as its efficiency to the public is concerned? Let me tell you what will happen: Wherever now the schedule of service provides for two, three, or more trips to be made by a letter carrier, and which is now covered even imperfectly for each of those trips, a schedule of duty will be arranged which will permit of the number of trips now made to be continued only on those heavy days, so called, and on the lighter days whole trips will be dispensed with entirely, so that the carriers may be kept within the time prescribed by this bill. Those who are unfortunate enough to have their mail arrive for delivery at those times and on those days which are considered light and thereby can be dispensed with will be compelled to do without their mail at all, thereby deliberately detaining said mail in order that the work may be completed on the heavier days.

Again, too, what is the necessity for this amendment? By its provisions it is proposed that if any letter carrier is employed for a greater number of hours than forty-eight during the working days in any week, he shall be paid extra for the same in proportion to the salary fixed by law. If that provision was in existence to-day, the Postmaster-General would have the right to employ the letter carriers whatever number of hours would be necessary for them to complete their deliveries any day, and pay them for such extra service, for by the provisions of the existing law letter carriers may be so employed.

Mr. Chairman, I give notice once more that I shall call for a yea-and-nay vote on this amendment in the House. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the Chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to joint resolution (S. Res. 116) to provide for the administration of civil affairs in Porto Rico pending the appointment and qualification of the civil officers provided for in the act approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FORAKER, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 222) to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed from the stereotype plates now in the Government Printing Office an extra edition of 13,000 copies of Report No. 64 of the Department of Agriculture, entitled "Field Operations of the Division of Soils in 1899:" 2,000 copies for distribution by Members and Delegates of the House of Representatives, 1,000 copies for distribution by Senators, and 10,000 copies for distribution by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed 4,500 copies of Notes on the Spanish-American War, Office of Naval Intelligence, Navy Department, with accompanying papers and documents, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9824) authorizing the Secretary of War to make regulations governing the running of loose logs, steamboats, and rafts on certain rivers and streams, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN PORTO RICO.

The SPEAKER. With the unanimous consent of the House, the Chair will lay before the House the action of the Senate on the amendments of the House to Senate joint resolution 116, to provide for the administration of civil affairs in Porto Rico pending the appointment and qualification of the civil officers provided for in the act approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes." Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendments to the joint resolution 116 and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House insist on its amendments to joint resolution 116 and agree to the conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. JONES of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also submits the following action of the Senate on the bill (H. R. 9824) authorizing the Secretary of War to make regulations governing the running of loose logs, steamboats, and rafts on certain rivers and streams.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War shall have power, and is hereby authorized and directed, to prescribe rules and regulations to govern the floating of loose timber and logs, and sack rafts, so called, of timber and logs and general navigation, on any one or all of the navigable rivers or waterways of the United States, wherever in his judgment such regulations are necessary to equitably adjust and govern the conflicting interests of logging and other forms of navigation; and such regulations, when so prescribed and published, shall have the force of law, and any violation thereof shall be a misdemeanor, and every person convicted of a violation thereof shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $2,500 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) for not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That the proper action to enforce the provisions of this section may be commenced before any commissioner, judge, or court of the United States, and such commissioner, judge, or court shall proceed in respect thereto as authorized by law in the case of crimes against the United States.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War may, at any time, alter or modify any rules and regulations prescribed by him under the provisions of this act; and he may rescind such rules and regulations whenever in his judgment the necessity for their continuance no longer exists.

"SEC. 3. That whenever rules and regulations shall have been prescribed by the Secretary of War for any waterway, in pursuance of section 1 of this act, and until such rules and regulations shall have been rescinded by his order, the said waterway shall be exempt from the prohibition contained in section 15 of the river and harbor act approved March 3, 1899, against floating loose timber and logs, or what is known as sack rafts of timber and logs, in streams or channels actually navigated by steamboats.

"SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is hereby reserved.

"SEC. 5. That this act shall not, nor shall any rules or regulations prescribed thereunder, in any manner affect any civil action or actions heretofore commenced and now pending to recover damages claimed to have been sustained by reason of the violation of any of the terms of said section 15 of the act of March 3, 1899, as originally enacted, or in violation of any other law."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to make regulations governing the running of loose logs and rafts on navigable waters."

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BURTON, Mr. MORRIS, and Mr. LESTER.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session, and proceeded with the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to have the chairman of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads occupy some of his time.

Mr. LOUD. I do not desire to speak now.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have reserved the balance of my time until you use some of yours.

Mr. LOUD. When I take the floor I shall conclude.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have the affirmative of the proposition, and I suppose I have the right to close the debate.

Mr. LOUD. I think the universal custom of the House gives the closing of the debate to the committee. I never knew it to be otherwise.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand the rule is that when the debate lasts more than one day, that the side having the affirmative of the proposition has the right to close.

Mr. LOUD. I insist that the gentleman use his time, if he wants to, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to use the balance of my time, and I do not think it is exactly fair for the gentleman to insist that I shall do so now. I have the right to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Minnesota would have the right to close debate.

Mr. LOUD. Does the Chair think that the committee is not entitled to close debate?

The CHAIRMAN. So far as this proposition is concerned, the burden is on the gentleman from Minnesota, and he is entitled to close debate upon this proposition.

Mr. LOUD. That is the first time I have ever heard of such a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will understand that this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent out of the ordinary rules. Under the ordinary rules the gentleman from Minnesota, as the proponent of the measure now being debated, would have the right to close.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is the same ruling that applies to any of our debates that proceed by unanimous consent for two or three days, but I do not take away from the committee any right that it may have.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Minnesota is entitled to close debate on this proposition.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I will not take any great length of time in discussing this proposition. The gentleman has made a good speech on this subject and made a very good presentation of his case. The gentleman, of course, is but human, and when he states his proposition as a lawyer he does not desire to state the weak points of his case; and if perchance he can make his case stronger by stating one part of it, why he simply pursues the course that every other lawyer pursues. Then it is for the other side to present their side of the case.

Now, the gentleman got emphatic when he told you how many hours a day railway mail clerks worked. He cited to you several instances, although I did not follow him closely as to what routes; but he left the impression on this House that the railway mail clerks worked over seventeen hours a day, because he gave the time that was occupied in the run out, in the lay over in these places, and the time of the run back, and yet the gentleman forgot—as all people forget when they desire to argue a case—to state another perhaps important factor in the case. He did not tell this House how much lay over these clerks got when they had completed that run.

Now, I make the statement, without fear of successful contradiction, that there is not a railway mail clerk in service to-day, or ever has been, that averages working eight hours out of twenty-four for thirty days consecutively. I am willing to admit that the railway mail service is a hard service, but it must be admitted, on the other hand, that they are well paid. I have made the statement that they were paid more than any other branch of the postal service, and I reiterate that statement to-day. The gentleman, in his argument, of course took a few of the higher paid officials in the post-offices and attempted to average from that.

Why, the House is not going to be deceived by any statement of that character. You can only strike averages by taking the whole; and the gentleman knows as well as any other man on the floor of this House that the post-office clerks to-day include in their average assistant postmasters, receiving a salary in many instances as high as $3,000, and that under the law they are not receiving an average of over $720 a year. And he made the statement here that the railway mail clerks were receiving an average salary of one thousand and—I do not recollect what.

Mr. TAWNEY. A thousand and thirty-seven dollars now, $1,080 under the proposition of the gentleman, and $1,175 under my proposition.

Mr. LOUD. And he made some comparisons with the foreign service, and read something from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General or General Superintendent's report. The gentleman forgot to tell you what the pay of the clerks were in the London post-office when they were taken out and put on the train. The maximum salary paid to the postal clerks in the London post-office is 30 shillings a week, and he must work ten years to secure that pay. It is true when they are taken out of the London post-office and put into the railway mail service they do receive an extra allowance to pay for their meals. I do not remember the remainder of his argument.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will read it in his own time, I will furnish it to him.

Mr. LOUD. I do not care anything about what there is there. I have read every word of it. The writer of that article says there was an increase of salary, but he forgot to say how much. I say there is no increase of salary. I know who wrote that article. He was with me in Europe in the investigation of this postal service. They do receive extra compensation—what you would term compensation; it is extra "allowance"—when detailed to perform railway mail service; and I believe if a man here only received 30 shillings a week and was detailed to go on the road, he ought to receive an allowance of fifty to seventy-five dollars a year, which they do allow in those countries.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] says I have deceived this House—not intentionally, he says. When I spoke of lifting up along the whole line, the gentleman was inclined to be technical. I state again there is an increase along the whole line, or else where comes the increase? The gentleman says there is an increase here of how much?

Mr. TAWNEY. One hundred and forty thousand dollars.

Mr. LOUD. Let us take the increase allowed by Congress for a number of years. The increase for the year 1897 over 1896 was $306,000 for Railway Mail Service; for 1898 over 1897, $351,000; for 1899 over 1898, $325,000; for 1900 over 1899, $371,000. Now, I did make the statement on the floor of this House that this was the largest increase in amount that ever had been given. Whence comes the amount of $965,000? Where does it go to when we have never before given an increase greater than $371,000? Now, the gentleman from Minnesota undertook to convince the House that there is an increase here of only $140,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. How does the gentleman explain his statement made on Monday that there was $500,000 increase in the railway postal clerks?

Mr. LOUD. Because, if the gentleman will carefully dissect this—I do not think he can—but if the gentleman who gave you the figures had given you all the facts, you would find that there is an increase in the salaries here of $500,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. He has given me the facts.

Mr. LOUD. He has given you the facts the way you give the facts. He gave you the facts he wanted to, but he did not give all the facts.

Mr. TAWNEY. Wherein in your bill do you provide for an increase of salaries, except in class 5b and class 4b?

Mr. LOUD. We do not provide for any increase in classes, because we did not propose in that particular to go beyond the present law. I am free to say that I believe $1,400 is enough for a railway mail clerk. You have my position on that. The Post-Office Committee have more things to contend against, perhaps, than the gentleman from Minnesota knows. He can make a speech on the floor of this House and advocate the increase in salaries of the railway mail clerks, and he would not be responsible if the increase was made.

We can afford among ourselves, if we imagined that there was no reporter here or a single person present in the gallery, to be honest and frank with ourselves. Let us assume for one moment that we are placed in the same position here that we would be placed in in the committee room. As chairman of the Post-Office Committee I shall do my duty fearlessly as I see it. I am a Republican, and I have the interests of the Republican party at stake. I am a citizen of this country, and I have the interests of the whole country at stake.

There is pending, as the gentleman well stated, a bill increasing the salaries of the railway mail clerks, and it has been pending a number of years; not this particular bill, but another bill. Last year was the first time that this bill was ever presented to Congress. Oh, I know the gentleman will deny it.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the Fifty-fourth Congress was it not reported from your committee?

Mr. LOUD. I think the last Congress was the first time this particular bill was ever presented. That bill involves an increase of salaries of the present force in the Railway Mail Service of more than $1,000,000. There is before the Post-Office Committee a bill to increase the salaries of the post-office clerks, and, permit me to say, the most equitable measure for an increase of salaries ever presented to this body. That bill will involve an annual increase of salaries for five years of more than one million and a half dollars a year outside the amount for increase service.

There is a letter carriers' salary bill which proposes an increase of salary to every letter carrier in the country of $200 a year, and in every city of 75,000 inhabitants and less of $350 a year. There are over 15,000 letter carriers. You can understand what that means—three million and a half dollars. There is pending before the Post-Office Committee, with a greater backing on the floor of this House and outside of it than any other measure here, and perhaps as equitable a measure as any of them, a bill to increase the salaries of fourth-class postmasters. Most of these provisions are supported by the Department. Another provision supported by the Department, which I am of the opinion this House might pass on the eve of an election—and it is noticed that these questions come up always preceding an election, and at the short session nobody is particularly anxious about them—a proposition to remove competition in star-route contracts.

And let us see how far we should follow the recommendation of the Post-Office Department. The Department has sought here for some years to get Congress to strike out that provision and remove competition entirely, placing in the hands of the Post-Office Department the power to let star-route contracts to persons who must agree to perform personally the service and who must live on the route. Notwithstanding the fact that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General stated that upon a test it was found that on 56 per cent of the star routes in this country there was no local bidder, and on the other 44 per cent, if the local bid had been accepted, it would have increased the amount of the star-route contracts 50 per cent—in the face of that the Post-Office Department advocates the elimination of that provision of law providing for competition in the bidding for star-route service.

The Post-Office Committee is confronted with these propositions. Members of Congress are naturally timid preceding an election, and particularly preceding a Presidential election. These propositions involve an increased expenditure of from fifteen to twenty-five million dollars annually. No man can accurately determine the exact amount. If they come to this House, they will all come together. You might as well meet this question like men. You can not deal with this proposition in detail. If you want to do what you term an "act of justice" to the highest paid officials in the Post-Office Department, then you must extend your action down along the whole line.

Let me say one word to the Republican party as represented by members on this floor. Can you afford to go to the country, particularly on the eve of an election, with an increase of salaries along the line amounting to from fifteen to twenty-five million dollars on your Post-Office appropriation bill? And let me say to gentlemen on the other side of the House, who claim that they are going to have control of the next Congress, can you afford to have this increase placed upon you, which you can not shake off? It is true that you can now condemn the Republican party for extravagance, as you did after the Fifty-first Congress; but when you came together in the Fifty-second Congress, you found that you could not shake off the increases that had been placed upon the Government.

I do not desire to stop Congress from doing what it wants to do. Sometimes Congress tries to deceive the country; sometimes Congress tries to deceive itself. It is a well-known fact that there have been petitions presented to the Speaker of this House in days gone by containing more than 300 names of members of this House; yet when the Speaker asked the membership of the House generally as to whether they were agonizing to pass those measures, the general reply was "That is with you; we do not care."

Your Post-Office Committee thought it advisable to restore in a measure the salaries that existed fifteen years ago in this service. And, mind you, these men are paid to-day as much as they were in 1884. And no man can contend that the prices of articles which these men consume are higher to-day or that wages throughout the country are higher to-day than they were in 1884 or for six or seven years succeeding that date; and of these men who are now pressing for an increase of salary all along the line, many of them back in the days when greenbacks were worth but 70 cents on the dollar were content to fill these places, but now, when our money is worth more than the money of any nation on the earth, they have suddenly discovered that they are underpaid. The trend of wages in this country has been on the whole downward for the past twenty years; the tendency of the salaries of Government officials has been upward.

Mr. HOPKINS. If that is true as to clerks that get $1,000 and under, why is it not equally true of assistant division superintendents, who, according to this bill as I see, have their salaries increased $200 a year? Why is it not equally true of chief clerks, whose salaries under this bill are also increased $200 a year? And why is it not equally true of clerks of class 5, whose salaries are increased $100 a year, and clerks of class 4, whose salaries are increased $50 a year?

Mr. LOUD. Now, let me say to the gentleman from Illinois—and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], who has agonized to-day a good deal over an amendment offered here in good faith, upon which any gentleman could have raised a point of order if he had wanted to—that in my opinion—I speak only for myself—all men are not worth the same amount of money. We did go beyond the present law in increasing the salaries of chief clerks, first, because there never was such an office as a chief clerk; and the service within the last few years has grown to such an extent that the chief clerk of a line has in many instances charge of three or four hundred men.

Now, we took 748 clerks and put them up to $1,400, the maximum salary allowed by law. The committee thought that, as we had increased the men, it was but proper and just that those having charge of the men should have higher salaries. That proposition was subject to a point of order. The gentleman from Minnesota could have made it; he did not have the nerve to do so.

He did not fool me any when he was parleying with me here.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will you now, after the proposition that I have presented is disposed of, afford me an opportunity to let you know whether I have the nerve or not?

Mr. LOUD. If you want to raise the point of order against this whole paragraph, I am perfectly willing that it shall go out. You need not worry about that.

Mr. TAWNEY. I should like to know why you did not increase the salaries of the remainder of class 5?

Mr. LOUD. I will tell you why. This segregation was drawn by a man who, I assume, knows his business a great deal better than I know it. This segregation was drawn by the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service upon certain suggestions from our committee that we could afford to increase the salaries this year some, but that we could not afford to go to the extreme limit.

Now, if the gentleman will keep his seat a moment, I will be perfectly fair and frank with everybody. I stated to him—the gentleman evidently did not hear me, because he was too anxious to interrupt—that the suggestion was made to the General Superintendent; and I will relieve him from any responsibility, because I think he would be very glad to see every man in his service receive $1,800 or $2,400 a year. He gets $3,500 himself, more than any man occupying a similar position under the United States Government, and can afford to be very generous. He has a large heart, a large salary, and feels kindly toward mankind, especially postal clerks.

Now, all the men in class 5 do not do similar work. The General Superintendent told me—and I suppose he told me the truth—that he had taken out all of the night runs and all of the hard runs, and he thought this was a fair point on which to make the division, and hence we increase those $100. He did say to me that there was a great distinction between those two classes that we have created here, and the very bill that the gentleman from Minnesota proposes makes that distinction more marked. If you know what that bill does contain, you have taken this very character of men yourself and made a distinction of salary of $200 a year, and yet you seek to criticise the Post-Office Committee because they have made a distinction here of but $100.

The gentleman has claimed that we did not do what was right in increasing the salaries of class 4b. We did increase the salaries of a portion of class 4, just the same as we did in classes 5 and 4, because all of the men in each of those classes do not do the same work. That is just what you propose to do in your bill, only you make the distinction more marked.

The General Superintendent told us that these men in class 4 were not all performing the same character of service or the same amount of service, and he picked out of that number of about 1,600, 938 men who were performing extraordinary service above the others. Oh, there is more equity in this bill than the gentleman imagines.

Now, when it comes down to the lower classes, we could not increase their salaries without infringing upon the law; and permit me to say, personally, I do not think their salaries should be increased. Let us see what the railway mail clerk is receiving. His minimum salary is $800 a year. In six months he goes into the $900 class, or if he has been a substitute for six months he goes into the $900 class at once. Do you understand? If he has been on the substitute list under the present regulation for six months, he receives his appointment at $900, and almost immediately at the end of one year he goes into the $1,000 class. I ask, in God's name, what vocation is there in this world where a man can go to work and at the end of one year receive a thousand dollars?

The gentleman says there are no increases. Let me call his attention to the fact that this bill carries $600,000 more of increases than ever were made for the Railway Mail Service before. Yet the gentleman tells this House there is but $147,000 of increase, and he agonizing for a million. In this estimate the gentleman has lost sight of the fact that the General Superintendent has estimated that men will go up; that is, that men will go from class 1 to 2, from class 2 to 3, from class 3 to 4, and from class 4 to 5, as they do under the present regulation, and there is where the money goes.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that I care to talk longer upon this subject. I do not see the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] here. Is he present?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes; "the gentleman" is here.

Mr. LOUD. I want to say to the gentleman that with great emphasis he laid much stress upon the fact that no man could bring here a letter carrier who was in favor of the provision to which he refers. Now, let me say that I could bring a great many.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Produce one.

Mr. LOUD. Why, I can not produce a letter carrier here now. The gentleman well knows that.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The Department will not let one come here.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think they could come on the floor of the House under our rules. You are daring me to do a thing that you know can not be done.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Do you mean to tell me that a letter carrier dare not express his convictions with regard to this matter?

Mr. LOUD. Well, the gentleman is the special champion of labor organizations throughout this country.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not claim to be anything of the kind.

Mr. LOUD. I assume that men who are members of labor organizations will take one position personally and another position when they are speaking through their organizations. Let me say to the gentleman that no less a personage than the general superintendent of the free-delivery service, who was an attendant upon the annual meeting of the Letter Carriers' Association, came back to me and said, "The general consensus of opinion—I can not say it is unanimous, but the general consensus, so far as I am able to ascertain it—is in favor of this proposition," a proposition, let me say, which our Postal Commission has been discussing ever since its appointment. Our commission had many people before it, talked with many carriers personally, and personally I have never yet found a carrier who opposed this proposition.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Did you have a carrier before your committee?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes; we had quite a number.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Did you print the hearings? I should like to see the name of one of them.

Mr. LOUD. The hearings are in print. The gentleman knows all about that, and does not care to take my time on that, and I have referred to what the Postal Commission has done in a very small degree, as the gentleman knows.

Now, that amendment was offered here yesterday on my own personal responsibility. There was no secrecy about it. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD], who I believe is the friend of the carriers, as well as the gentleman from New York—for that seems to have been his special field ever since he has been a member of Congress—the gentleman from Massachusetts knew what the provision was.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I was not here when it was brought up. I was in committee at work.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] was here, and the good sense of the gentleman from Massachusetts, at least at first blush, told him that that was good legislation and was what should be done.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will allow me just here, I only yielded to allow that proposition to go into the bill because of the fact that the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] said that the proposition was satisfactory to the letter carriers.

Mr. LOUD. I made that statement yesterday, and I make it again to-day.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I wish to state at this time——

Mr. CUMMINGS. On behalf of the letter carriers' representatives, I deny it.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The representatives of the letter carriers here in Washington have waited upon me, and say that they are absolutely and totally opposed to that proposition, and they want it stricken out, and I propose at the proper time, if I can get consent, to ask that that thing be done.

Mr. LOUD. It is not so much what one letter carrier wants or what they all want as it is a question whether it is a good business proposition—that Congress should determine whether it is a good business proposition or whether somebody wants it.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman——

Mr. LOUD. I have but a few minutes left. There is not a member on the floor of this House but what knows that this is a proper thing to do.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Here is one who does not.

Mr. LOUD. The letter carriers of this country do not work and can not work under an eight-hour schedule more than seven hours and twenty minutes a day. Let me say to the gentleman, although, of course, he is much closer to them than I am, more than a hundred have told me that on some days they were compelled to make such speed in order to come within the time that they were exhausted, while on other days they had plenty of time at their disposal; and they thought, and the Department thinks, that if they were permitted to deliver their mail and complete the delivery, if it took ten, fifteen, twenty, or thirty minutes over the eight hours on one day, no one would be seriously injured and the people would get their mail.

But it is a common occurrence now that on certain days of the week mail must be brought back to the office because they can not deliver it on some trip in the time stipulated. The Department do not and would not take any unfair advantage of them. The gentleman laid some stress on the fact that they might be compelled to work on Sundays. They are now, permit me to say. The gentleman represents some 1,500 or 1,800 letter carriers in New York, each of whom has a vote. If they wanted them to work on Sundays, they can compel them to work.

Mr. CUMMINGS. They are not enforcing it there.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes; they are. The amendment went in in such shape that I supposed it was the unanimous wish of Congress. Yesterday, I believe it was; to-day somebody has heard from a carrier, and he has changed his mind. Yesterday it was wise legislation, and to-day it can not go, because you have heard from the carriers.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Because it was put in under false pretenses.

Mr. LOUD. It was not put in under false pretenses. Yesterday it seemed to be the unanimous wish. And let me say to you in perfect good faith that I have not heard a single carrier yet object to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The representatives of the carriers' organization object to it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Is this not distinctly a violation of the provision of the eight-hour law passed in 1888?

Mr. LOUD. I do not know in what respect. It is simply provided that they shall not work in excess of forty-eight hours in the six days. If they work on Sundays under the amendment——

Mr. CUMMINGS. They do not.

Mr. LOUD. I read the provision to you. The Post-Office Department to-day can under the law work these carriers eight hours on Sundays if they see fit to do so. The provision is simply that they may work them eight and a half hours one day and seven and a half hours another.

When I was in New York I talked with many of the carriers, and they said that "Saturday afternoon is light, and we have very little to do. We would like to get Saturday afternoon off if we could work half an hour more three, four, or five days in order to have Saturday afternoon off." There is no man here, I believe, that would not rather work a little while longer Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in order that he might have half a day off on Saturday.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. If that plan is carried out, how would the mail be distributed on Saturday afternoon?

Mr. LOUD. In many of the large cities but a small amount of business is done on Saturdays. There is in many cities no business done whatever in the afternoon during the summer. Ninety-nine per cent of the business houses are closed up and nothing going on; and yet the carrier must sit around his eight hours, with nothing to do, and on Monday he can not deliver all the mail.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Are people living in residences not to be considered, or are business people only to be considered?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, they would be considered, and get their mail.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I desire to call attention to the gentleman's amendment. It provides that the carriers can be worked any number of hours that may be required by the needs of the service. In the latter part of his amendment it states:

> If any letter carrier is employed for a greater number of hours than forty-eight hours during the working days in any week, he shall be paid extra for the same in proportion to the salary fixed by law.

And it says nothing about the extra hours on Sunday.

Mr. LOUD. Well, they can not anticipate that the post-office will work them more than now.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. There is no provision here if they do work them.

Mr. LOUD. We must assume that they would be reasonable.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It was not reasonable after the passage of the law.

Mr. LOUD. Well, now let me say that perhaps I know as much as the gentleman does on that subject, for at the time the overpay question first came up for consideration I was a postal employee, and of the more than three millions paid for overtime much was paid for the time that letter carriers lay around the office and were not working.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And were they not paid in accordance with the judgment of the court?

Mr. LOUD. Why, yes; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And the Department forced them to go to the court to get what was theirs under the law.

Mr. LOUD. The men were not working, and the Department did not think they ought to be paid; but the court held they were working if in the office; and out of that came an order of the Department which was unfortunate for the carriers. It forced them into the cold in the winter, because if they permitted them to remain in the warm room they would go to the Court of Claims and charge for the time that they were there.

Mr. CUMMINGS. A printer has to stay in the office until he gets copy.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think I have anything further to say. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing, if the gentleman from New York wants to raise the point of order against that amendment, that we should go back to it, and let it go out on a point of order. If the friends of the letter carriers do not want this provision here I am perfectly willing that it should go out on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will give way for a request for unanimous consent that that may be done, I will raise the point of order.

Mr. LOUD. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that we may go back to that paragraph.

Mr. LOUD. Wait until we get through with this paragraph. I do not know that I have anything further, Mr. Chairman, to say to the committee. I feel justified in what the committee has presented on this bill, not only on behalf of the railway mail clerks, but on behalf of the post-office clerks. We have gone as far as we thought it was wise to go at this time.

Mr. TAWNEY and Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachussetts rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we may go back to the paragraph in the bill where the amendment was offered——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The point of order is that we can not hear what the gentleman from Massachusetts is saying.

Mr. MAHON. The regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is finishing the debate already fixed by the House on this paragraph. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that this can be done better after debate on this paragraph is finished.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Very well, Mr. Chairman, I will wait.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do not care to occupy the floor for three minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do not know, but what I have to say I can not say in three minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, during the debate I have heard a great deal about the cost of this service, but I have not heard a word about justice. I think all agree with me that too often very much is said about cost and too little about justice and fairness. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is a fair provision. It is founded upon justice and should be passed because in it the railway mail clerks are treated precisely as the post-office and other clerks in the Departments are treated. A clerk is not eligible to that title until he is paid $1,000, the lowest rate of compensation. The next class is $1,200, the next $1,400, the next $1,600, and the next $1,800.

Now, why shall we place the clerks in the Departments, who work from 9 in the morning until 4 in the afternoon, with a half an hour for lunch, on classified salaries from $1,000 to $1,800, and put mail clerks, into whose work enters the element of danger, upon the lower salaries now paid? I can not understand wherein lie fairness and justice in such an arrangement. It seems to me that men who travel upon railroads day and night are certainly as worthy the consideration of this House as the clerks in the Departments of Washington, who work in pleasant rooms during pleasant hours.

The civil service came into life in 1881 by covering Departments in Washington. It did not then cover the Railway Mail Service. Under the first Cleveland Administration these railway clerks were thrown out and new men given their places, resulting in chaos. The mails were improperly delivered and everything was in confusion. In 1889 it was absolutely necessary to cover this branch of the service by civil service in order to keep trained and disciplined clerks in postal cars as well as in the Departments. It was demonstrated that the mail service demanded men skilled in the work and that such skill could come only by long training.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] said yesterday that the doors of every Department were crowded with people willing to come in and do the work for less than they are now receiving. Gentlemen, that is true of doors in front of every dry goods establishment and every factory throughout the country. There is a waiting list of hundreds of people willing to go into the factories and stores and work for less than those employed.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not know that I took the position that there were men willing to do the work for less money; my remark, I believe, was that they would gladly accept the salary and do the same laborious work.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I understood the gentleman to say that they were willing to do the work for less money.

Mr. TALBERT. Possibly I did say that. If I did not, I will say so now. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. But this is no argument why those at work should not be paid proper wages and placed upon an equality with others doing no better grade of work. It takes time to discipline and organize a working force, whether it be in the dry-goods business or in a Government Department, before a body of men can be made of the highest use. Indifferent, careless, lazy men must be weeded out and the worthy molded by education and experience into a company of good workers. This takes time and costs money; but after this process such a corps is worth much more than an undisciplined and an unselected throng at the door of a private business establishment or a Government Department. A man with a hoe is one thing; a man with a hoe who has learned to use it is quite another.

The railway mail clerks, next to the soldiers of our Army, are the best organized and disciplined body of men in the Government service, and, except that of the soldiers, their work is the most tiresome and dangerous, while its character is fully up to the standard of many clerical positions. They must pass a civil-service examination as difficult as that submitted to a first-class clerk, and promotion must come by hard, continuous service, good habits, and fidelity. Does any reason exist, therefore, why such men should not receive the pay and be entitled to opportunities for promotion the same as men in the Departments? House bill No. 2 only places them on an equality with Department clerks.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] asked me why I do not cite the salaries paid to railway postal clerks in London. I want to read from an article written by the gentleman referred to, Mr. V. J. Bradley, who was in London and Europe with the distinguished chairman of this committee:

It is to be noted that all promotions are based upon the length of time in the service, good conduct of course being presupposed. An ordinary postal clerk who would be on duty four-fifths of the time in an average year would secure a subsistence allowance, at 75 cents per trip, of about $219 per annum. His minimum salary, plus the subsistence allowance at the beginning, would be $479 per annum; and his maximum salary, plus the subsistence allowance, would be $1,019 per annum.

Just the average salary of a railway postal clerk in the United States who, as General Shallenberger says, is doing as much work as two railway postal clerks in England perform—that is to say, the Government of Great Britain pays $2,000 for the same service for which the Government of the United States pays $1,000.

The hours of duty and the amount of work performed are apparently much easier than in the United States. For example, night work is limited to seven hours per day, and day work to eight hours per day. Any service over this allows of overtime claim of one and a quarter rates for all time over forty-eight hours a week. Sunday work and work on Christmas and Good Friday counts one and a half rates. The employees who have been over five years in the service get an annual vacation of twenty-one working days; those of less than five years' service get a vacation of fourteen working days. The employees also have a sick leave for six months with pay, if necessary; but there is a medical investigation if an employee is absent over nine days on account of sickness in any one year. They all receive in due course a free pension of as many sixtieths of the last salary held as the employee has had years of service, but not exceeding forty-sixtieths.

The gentleman from California has tried to scare the Republicans of this House to induce them to vote against this proposition. He tries to frighten them by calling their attention to the fact that we are on the eve of a Presidential election, and he tries to make it appear that gentlemen who advocate this proposition do so because an election is coming and they want the assistance of railway postal clerks. Why, sir, the gentleman knows as well as every other member of this House that there is only one class of Government employees that are unable to exert any political influence, and that class is the railway postal clerk. Nine-tenths of these men do not vote at all. They can not vote. What opportunities have they to exert any political influence, shut up as they are in their box cars from morning till night and from night till morning?

No, Mr. Chairman, those of us who favor this proposition do not do so for the purpose of securing the political influence of the railway postal clerks, but for the purpose of doing an act of justice, simple justice, by giving to these men a sufficient allowance of salary to enable them to maintain themselves and their families and to educate their children as other employees of the Government are able to do with the salaries they receive. When on duty these men are away from their homes and their families half the time. They are obliged to pay the expenses incident to such enforced absence. Why, sir, there are men sitting here at the front doors of the different Departments to see that members of Congress and Senators are not admitted into the presence of the heads of the Departments unannounced, who are receiving larger compensation than the average salary paid to the railway mail clerks, the custodians of the people's property, and who on entering this service, take their lives in their own hands. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. On the point of order I submit that the provision to which my proposition is offered as an amendment is itself out of order—is obnoxious to the rule. But it has been passed; it is before the Committee of the Whole; and that being so, it is competent and entirely proper to amend it.

I read from Hinds's Parliamentary Precedents:

A proposition which is before the House, even though of such a nature as to have been ruled out on a point of order, had one been made, may be projected by amendment.

On June 14, 1884, the House was considering Senate amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill, among which was the following:

"For special facilities on trunk lines, $185,000."

It was moved to recede and concur in this amendment with an amendment making the sum $250,000.

Mr. William S. Holman, of Indiana, made the point of order that this amendment was not in order.

The Speaker held: While the Chair supposes there is no permanent provision of law authorizing this expenditure, still the proposition to expend a certain amount of money for that purpose is now properly before the House; and the Chair thinks that the proposition, being properly before the House, is amendable without regard to the rule applying to an original amendment proposed in the House. In other words, as an illustration, if the Committee on Appropriations should report a bill containing within it a provision not strictly authorized by law—amendments proposed to such a proposition should not be ruled out upon a point of order, because the subject upon which they are predicated, being virtually before the House, is a legitimate subject of amendment, either by increasing or diminishing the amount of appropriation. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

I think, Mr. Chairman, this proposition comes directly within that ruling. Here is a proposition increasing the salaries of certain railway postal clerks, providing for an entirely new classification, different from existing law. It is obnoxious to the rule, but has been passed, and is properly before the House. My amendment simply seeks to strike out a part of that reclassification and amend the proposition. I submit that the amendment is in order.

Mr. LOUD. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. LOUD. Then I withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt that the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is correct, that where a committee on a general appropriation bill undertakes to legislate in violation of the rule the Committee of the Whole has the right either to make the point of order or, passing the point of order, has the right to perfect that legislation by amendment.

It must, however, be perfected by some amendment or proposition that is germane to the paragraph to which the amendment is offered.

The Chair does not think that in the paragraph under consideration there is any reclassification. There is a change of existing law with respect to at least one salary, but so far as classification is concerned there is no change of existing law. That is to say, the salaries in the classes which are mentioned in the paragraph are all as to amount within the limit allowed by existing law.

It is perfectly competent under existing law to authorize salaries at one rate to a portion of a class and salaries at another rate to another portion of that class, and that is all that is attempted to be done here. There is no reclassification. The terms "a" and "b," as used in the paragraph, are used simply for the purpose of convenience, and they may be stricken out without affecting the legislation in any respect. So that, so far as classification is concerned, there is, in the judgment of the Chair, no new legislation in this paragraph. There is new legislation, however, with respect to the increase of salaries outside of the classes named, and this makes the paragraph amendable, provided the amendment offered is germane.

Now, the subject-matter of this paragraph is simply an appropriation for salaries to certain Government employees, recognized by law. The amendment offered is an independent bill now pending before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, entitled "A bill to reclassify postal clerks and prescribe their salaries," and it undertakes to establish an entirely new system. The provisions of the bill, after the first paragraph, perhaps, have no relation to reclassification or increase of salaries, but have relation to the duties of the Postmaster-General and to the duties of employees and to a great many details that are not germane to the paragraph now under consideration. To be admissible the amendment must be germane as a whole. It is not so germane. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. DALZELL, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10301) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate concurrent resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed 4,500 copies of Notes on the Spanish-American War, Office of Naval Intelligence, Navy Department, with accompanying papers and documents, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Navy Department—to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BARTLETT, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WHITE, for three days, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. LOUD (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for education of children in Alaska—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries submitting an estimate of appropriation for repairs to the station at San Marcos, Tex.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the chairman of the Industrial Commission, transmitting the report on prison labor—to the Committee on Labor, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 26, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. ALLEN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

VESSEL SLOOP BETSEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law, filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims, set out in the annexed findings by the court, relating to the vessel sloop Betsey, Benjamin Rhodes, master; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY OFFICERS IN CUBA AND PORTO RICO.

Mr. BACON. Yesterday there came to the Senate a reply from the Secretary of War in response to the inquiry of the Senate as to payments made to certain officers of the United States. It was read at length at the desk, and I supposed from that fact it would be printed in the RECORD, and therefore made no request to that effect. I am informed, however, that under such circumstances an executive communication is not printed in full in the RECORD without a request, and I now make the request that that reply may appear in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the communication from the Secretary of War touching the pay of certain officers in Cuba and Porto Rico be printed at length in the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. And as a document.

Mr. BACON. It has already been ordered printed as a document.

Mr. COCKRELL. All right, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXTRA COMPENSATION PAID TO ARMY OFFICERS IN CUBA AND PORTO RICO.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 25, 1900.

To the Senate of the United State

I have the honor to reply to the following resolution, dated April 21, 1900, received April 23:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to report to the Senate the following information:

"First. Whether any officer of the Army of the United States who is now, or who has been, on duty either in Cuba or Porto Rico since the date of the declaration of war by the United States against Spain has received any compensation for any service of any kind whatsoever other than the compensation to which such officer of the Army is, as such, entitled by law to receive as his salary and allowances.

"Second. If any officer of the United States Army has, during said period, while on duty in either Cuba or Porto Rico, received from any source any compensation other than that which he is, as such officer, entitled by law to receive as his salary and allowances; what is the name and rank of each such officer, and what the amount or amounts received by him; the date or dates on which each said amounts was so received; on what account the said amount or amounts were paid; by whom said payment or payments were authorized, and out of what fund or funds said payments were made."

Pursuant to the orders of the Secretary of War, dated respectively March 1, 1899, April 19, 1899, and May 9, 1899, copies of which are annexed hereto, allowances have been paid to four officers of the Army who have been required to live in the city of Habana and to perform important civil functions in connection with the administration of the government of Cuba, as follows:

To the military governor of Cuba, at the rate of $7,500 per year.

To the military governor of Habana, at the rate of $5,000 per year.

To the collector of customs for the island of Cuba, at the rate of $1,800 per year.

To the treasurer of the island of Cuba, at the rate of $1,800 per year.

These payments were in addition to the salary and allowances which the said officers were entitled as such to receive out of the Treasury of the United States. I am not aware of any other payments of the character described in the resolution to any officers in Cuba. I annex hereto a report received some months since from the Headquarters, Division of Cuba, showing that none other have been made. The payments have been made monthly from the dates stated in said orders until the present time. The precise dates of payment will appear in an itemized statement of receipts and expenditures now in course of preparation under a previous resolution of the Senate. Payments to the military governor of Habana will cease with the termination of that office on the 1st day of May, 1900. The names and ranks of the officers receiving the payments were, as military governor of Cuba, Maj. Gen. John R. Brooke, until the 13th day of December, 1899, and Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, U. S. V., since that time; as military governor of Habana, Brig. Gen. William Ludlow; as collector of customs for Cuba, Maj. Tasker H. Bliss; as treasurer of the island of Cuba, Maj. E. F. Ladd, U. S. V.

No allowances have been made to any officer in Porto Rico other than the statutory salary and allowances out of the Treasury of the United States.

The payments specified were made out of the revenues of the island of Cuba, on account of government thereof, and they were made on that account for the reason that it was impossible for the said officers to properly perform the necessary duties pertaining to their positions without the expenditure of the full amount of such allowances in addition to their statutory salaries and allowances out of the Treasury of the United States.

The aggregate of the payments thus made prior to the 1st day of the present month was $17,441.66. The total receipts of the island of Cuba collected by these officers during the period covered by the aforesaid expenditure therefrom amounted to $21,026,572.76, and the total disbursements under their direction amounted to $19,280,512.21.

Similar allowances to officers of the Army performing civil functions in Mexico and California were approved by Congress by the act of March 3, 1849, and the act of February 3, 1853. (A copy of the second section of the said first-mentioned act is annexed hereto.)

The said payments were authorized by the President of the United States upon the oral advice of the Attorney-General that the same were in all respects lawful.

Very respectfully, ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

HEADQUARTERS DIVISION OF CUBA,
Habana, January 23, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your telegraphic instructions of the 19th instant, and in reply thereto to report that the records of the office of the treasurer of island of Cuba show the following as the only allowances from insular funds made to the officers of the United States Army in the island of Cuba since the beginning of the military occupation.

These allowances are now in force:

	Year.
Military governor of Cuba, beginning January 1, 1899 (error for March 1, 1899)	$7,500
Military governor of Habana, beginning January 1, 1899 (error for March 1, 1899)	5,000
Collector of customs for Cuba, beginning January 1, 1899	1,800
Treasurer of the island of Cuba, beginning May 1, 1899	1,800

Very respectfully,

W. V. RICHARDS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.
(For and in the absence of the division commander.)

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 1, 1899.

Whereas the commanding generals of the Division of Cuba and the Department of Habana and the collector of customs for the island of Cuba and the port of Habana are, respectively, performing, in addition to their ordinary military duties, civil functions in connection with the administration of the government of Cuba which require outlays and expenses to maintain the proper dignity of their respective positions in excess of the amount of salary which they receive as officers of the United States Army:

Ordered, That for his services as military governor of the island of Cuba, the commanding general, Division of Cuba, shall receive an annual salary, out of the revenues of the island, at the rate of $7,500 a year; that the commanding general, Department of Habana, for his services as military governor of Habana, shall receive, out of the revenues of the island, an annual salary at the rate of $5,000; that the collector of customs for the island of Cuba, as collector of the port of Habana, shall receive, out of the customs revenues at Habana, an annual salary at the rate of $3,500 (revoked by order of April 19, 1899), these to be in addition to their regular salaries as officers of the United States Army, the allowances to begin March 1, 1899, and to be paid monthly, and evidenced by duly executed vouchers.

R. A. ALGER, Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 19, 1899.

ORDERS.

Whereas the collector of customs for the island of Cuba and port of Habana is performing, in addition to his ordinary military duties, civil functions in connection with the administration of the government of Cuba which require outlays and expenses to maintain the proper dignity of his position in excess of the amount of salary which he receives as an officer of the United States Army:

Ordered, That for the payment of the necessary expenses incurred, and to be incurred, incident to his representative capacity, said collector of customs for the island of Cuba and port of Habana shall receive, out of the customs revenues at Habana, an allowance at the rate of $1,800 per annum, beginning with January 1, 1899, and to be evidenced by duly executed vouchers. So much of War Department order dated March 1, 1899, on the same subject as relates to the collector of customs is revoked.

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Assistant Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 9, 1899.

ORDERS.

Whereas the treasurer of Cuba is performing, in addition to his ordinary military duties, civil functions in connection with the administration of the government of Cuba which require outlays and expenses to maintain the proper dignity of his position in excess of the amount of salary which he receives as an officer of the United States Army:

Ordered, That for the payment of the necessary expenses incurred, and to be incurred, incident to his representative capacity, said treasurer of Cuba shall receive, out of the revenues at Habana, an allowance at the rate of $1,800 per annum, beginning with May 1, 1899, and to be evidenced by duly executed vouchers.

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Assistant Secretary of War.

[Section 2 of an act to provide for the settlement of the accounts of public officers and others who may have received moneys arising from military contributions or otherwise in Mexico. (Approved March 3, 1849. Stat. L., volume 9, page 413.)]

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That where an officer has had the supervision of the collection of the military contributions at any of the ports in Mexico, and has at the same time exercised civil functions under the temporary government there established, or where an officer or other person shall have performed the duties of collectors at such ports, such officer or person shall be allowed a compensation which shall be assimilated in amount as nearly as may be, including the regular pay and emoluments of such officer, to that allowed by existing laws to officers of the customs in the United States where the services are similar in amount and importance; such allowance, in all cases, to be determined by the President of the United States. And all officers of the Army and other persons in public employment who have received payment for their services in collecting, keeping, or accounting for said moneys, and for other necessary services, are authorized to retain so much of the amounts so received as in the opinion of the President of the United States may be a fair compensation for said services.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented a memorial of Local Union No. 103, Painters and Decorators, of Flushing, N. Mr. COCKRELL. I present a letter, in the nature of a memorial, addressed to me by Green McCurtain, principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, and D. H. Johnston, governor of the Chickasaw Nation, remonstrating against the passage of House bill 9995, levying certain taxes for the education of children residing in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. I move that the memorial be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4291) to constitute Durham, N. C., a port of delivery in the customs collection district of Pamlico, and to extend the privileges of the seventh section of the act of Congress approved June 10, 1880, to said port, reported it without amendment.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7945) to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across Rainy Lake River," reported it without amendment.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1009) for the relief of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 338) to prohibit the giving of free railroad passes contrary to provisions of section 22 of the act to regulate commerce, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2928) for the establishment, control, operation, and maintenance of the Northern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Hot Springs, in the State of South Dakota, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4226) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yellowstone River, in the county of Dawson, State of Montana, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. I am directed by a simple majority of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1439) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, to report it adversely. I ask that it may be placed upon the Calendar for consideration hereafter. I desire to state that while I make this report adversely, I am in favor of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of The Smithsonian Institution: Documents Relative to its Origin and History 7,000 copies, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

NEW YORK PRINTING EXPOSITION.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I move to reconsider the votes by which the joint resolution (S. R. 113) authorizing the exhibit of Government relics at the New York Printing Exposition from May 2 to June 2, 1900, was ordered to a third reading and passed by the Senate yesterday. I find that the item had previously passed both Houses in an appropriation bill.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I move that the joint resolution be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

BALTIMORE AND POTOMAC RAILROAD.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to ask for a reprint, with the amendments of the committee, of the bill (S. 1929) to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks that the bill shall be reprinted with the amendments. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 4440) granting an increase of pension to Charles Stewart; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4461) for the relief of the heirs of Edward A. Wyatt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

GOVERNMENT OF CUBA.

Mr. MASON. I introduce a joint resolution, and ask that it be read at length and referred to the Committee on Relations with Cuba.

The joint resolution (S. R. 119) requesting the President of the United States to turn over the civil and military governments in Cuba to the people thereof on the 4th of July, 1900, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Relations with Cuba, as follows:

Whereas the United States of America, when entering upon war with Spain, for humane reasons, declared, by act of Congress, as follows:

"Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people," approved April 20, 1898; and

Whereas the United States has been in possession of Cuba since the signing of the protocol between Spain and the United States on the — day of ——, and since the treaty of peace in Paris on the — day of ——, the United States has been under treaty agreement to give absolute independence to the people of the island of Cuba; and

Whereas the continuance of the United States in possession of the said island and possession of the government thereof has excited the attention of the world, and is exciting the apprehension of the people of Cuba, many of them not hesitating to state that we are attempting to procure possession, ownership, and government of said island by diplomacy and fraud; and

Whereas the people of the United States and said island should both have free and untrammeled opportunity to express themselves as to what, if any, should be our mutual relations in the future; and

Whereas under the Monroe doctrine the said island is safe from foreign invasion; and

Whereas the Cubans have shown a disposition to make their best effort to govern themselves, and can undoubtedly do so without endangering life and property; and

Whereas the Government of the United States has done all that could be expected of it in keeping of its promise for the independence of Cuba, and the people of the United States do not desire to hinder or delay self-government, and which can only come to that brave people by actual experience: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House concurring therein), That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to withdraw the forces of the United States as rapidly as may be done with convenience and safety, and that on the 4th day of July, in this year of our Lord 1900, all civil and military power of the United States of America be turned over and surrendered to the people of the island of Cuba.

AMENDMENTS TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salaries of electricians in charge of plants at the New York, Mare Island, Norfolk, and Washington navy-yards from $1,200 to $2,400, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 for one agent to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy from the officers of the late confederate navy by reason of his personal experience and special aptitude, in connection with the work of collecting and compiling the Naval Records, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,200 for one clerk at the Naval station, Port Royal, S. C., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH FRANCE AND ALGERIA.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to communicate to the Senate, at the earliest practicable day, a statement showing the imports, by months, to the latest date obtainable, from France and Algeria under the provisions of the reciprocal commercial agreement which went into effect June 1, 1898, such statement to show the quantities and values wherever practicable and the duties paid on each article imported.

CHIPPEWA INDIAN INVESTIGATION.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof appointed by its chairman, is hereby instructed to inquire into the present condition of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, and the legislation required and appropriate to meet the needs and welfare of such Indians, and especially the rights of the Indians and white settlers dwelling on the Mille Lac Indian Reservation; and also the present system of examining timber on the Chippewa and ceded diminished reservations, in the State of Minnesota, and the sale thereof; and to visit the reservations of said Indians in the State of Minnesota, to employ a stenographer, to examine witnesses under oath, and to send for persons and papers; and to report the result of such inquiry, with recommendations for legislation; the actual expenses of such inquiry, including necessary assistance, to be paid on vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3419, known as the Alaska bill.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana to suspend a moment until I can call up a little bill that will not lead to any discussion.

Mr. CARTER. Let my request be granted and I will, with pleasure, yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to inquire in what condition the resolution is in reference to the Senator from West Virginia. I happened to be out of the Chamber at the time it was taken up yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was understood that that resolution should be taken up this morning whenever the Senator from Alabama was prepared to proceed.

Mr. PETTUS. Well, sir, I am prepared now.

Mr. CARTER. Then I withdraw my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PETTUS. I do not know what the business is. Is it for any formal business?

Mr. ALLEN. It is simply to call up a small bill, that is all. I will not insist on it.

Mr. PETTUS. Very well; I yield.

OLIVER H. PERRY.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2974) for the relief of Oliver H. Perry, administrator of the estate of Mary Scott, deceased.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It refers to the Court of Claims the claim of Oliver H. Perry, administrator of the estate of Mary Scott, deceased, for a finding of facts under the act of March 3, 1887, commonly known as the Tucker Act—first, as to the loyalty of the claimant; second, the value of the property taken by the United States Army, and third, the amount paid and the balance due claimant.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. PETTUS. I think I had better proceed, as this is the regular order.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I simply want to have a resolution referred which is on the Calendar.

Mr. PETTUS. If it is merely formal business, I certainly yield.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I desire to call up Senate resolution No. 68, declaring certain proposed amendments to the constitution of North Carolina in contravention of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, with a view of having it referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so referred.

SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution, reported by Mr. MCCOMAS from the Committee on Privileges and Elections March 12, 1900:

Resolved, That NATHAN B. SCOTT has been duly elected a Senator from the State of West Virginia for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1899, and that he is entitled to his seat in the Senate as such Senator.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has correctly stated that Senators voted against seating Mr. Mantle because he was a Silver Republican, and that Senators voted against seating Mr. Corbett, by way of retaliation, because he was a Gold Republican, then this Senate is in a sad condition of mind to act as judges, in any case. I can not believe these hard words of the Senator from New Hampshire against other Senators. If Senators vote in great cases, like the Mantle and the Corbett cases, on the grounds stated—well, they are unfit for judges, and unworthy to be in this body.

I desire in this case to speak only to Senators who can and who will decide the cause according to their best judgment, and not on a mere whim or personal caprice.

And, Mr. President, I claim that it has been my habit in discussing law questions to deal fairly with my own mind and to assert no proposition of law which I do not believe to be true. I do this as a matter of policy if for no better reason. For the man who is in the habit of advocating false propositions of law will so debauch his own mind, no matter what may be his learning or brain power, that he can not see the truth, though he meet it at noon in the public road. He makes "such a sinner" of his intellect "as to credit his own lie."

The question now submitted for your judgment is whether, according to the law of the land, the Hon. N. B. SCOTT is entitled to a seat as a Senator from West Virginia. The Committee on Privileges and Elections have given their report to the effect that he was so entitled. But that report is now to undergo the scrutiny of the Senate.

The learned and accurate lawyer who made the report and has ably presented the argument to sustain it has discussed two questions not now in issue, because they were unanimously decided by the committee in his favor and were abandoned by the parties contesting. The first was the objection that Senator SCOTT was not an inhabitant of West Virginia; and the second was that 48 votes were not a majority of the entire legislature. Neither of these objections was well founded in law, and nothing will be said by me as to either of them.

The Senator in charge of the report in this case is a learned and careful lawyer, of large experience and most gracious manner; and it is a real pleasure to hear him argue a law case, for he has clear perceptions and an evident intention to deal fairly.

But in his opening he took me to task for commenting on certain depositions, which the committee had refused to receive as evidence. In so calling me to account, the Senator failed to remember that in his report he had quoted from one of the very same rejected depositions an entire answer of Mr. John W. Davis, and based much of his argument on that deposition alone.

Now, while it is plain that the Senator from Maryland has no right to use the rejected depositions to prove his propositions, because he, with a majority, rejected the depositions, I have a right to use these depositions, not to prove the facts therein stated, but to prove that the committee ought to have allowed witnesses to be examined, but refused to do so, and to prove that this case has not been fully or fairly investigated. These depositions were taken according to the rules governing the taking of depositions in the United States courts where there are parties to a suit—that is, notice was served on Mr. SCOTT that certain named witnesses would be examined at a certain time and place before a certain officer.

But Mr. SCOTT did not attend. So the committee rejected the depositions, not for want of notice, but on the ground that the depositions were not taken under the authority of the Senate or its committee. Then the contestants asked to have the same witnesses examined before the committee, and that was refused. Then the contestants asked to be allowed to retake the depositions, and that was refused. So contestants were denied the privilege of producing any testimony except that which the counsel of Mr. SCOTT consented to admit.

And now, Senators, one of the questions you are to decide is whether this great cause ought not to be fully and fairly investigated on all such legal evidence as may be offered by either side. That it has not been so investigated as yet will be made manifest.

Surely for that purpose I have a right to speak of these depositions. I do not pretend that I have a right to use them to establish the facts stated in the depositions, but I have a right to use them to show to the Senate that this cause has never been fully or fairly investigated.

Mr. President, I took pains to write that much of what I had to say because I wanted to limit every word I said to the exact truth, and I did not want to make a mistake about it.

Now, Mr. President, let us examine this case first on the little evidence which has been allowed to be put in the cause. You ought to know, Senators, that this case does not come before you in an ordinary way. It does not come before you on the application of a man who claims to have been elected to this seat. It comes before you on the protest of a majority of the members of the legislature of the State of West Virginia. It comes before you on the protest of the majority of those who were members when this election was declared to have taken place.

So it is not one man seeking an office which another man holds; it is a State protesting against the wrong that has been done to it by this election. I beg all Senators to come up to the dignity of the question and decide this cause as judges, not because one man was a Gold Republican and the other man was a Silver Republican.

The facts from the evidence as received by the committee are as follows: On the 11th of January, 1899, the legislature of West Virginia assembled. Each house was organized. In the senate the Republicans had about two-thirds of the members, but two Republicans would not vote for Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCCOMAS. The Senator from Alabama, I think, will find that he is in error in saying that two members of the senate would not vote for Mr. SCOTT. Every member of the senate who was a Republican voted for Mr. SCOTT. The journal shows it. I think that is an error of printing, perhaps, in the views of the Senator.

Mr. PETTUS. Who was Mr. Haptonstall?

Mr. MCCOMAS. A member of the house, a delegate from Fayette County.

Mr. PETTUS. I only said that there were two Republicans. I did not say two senators.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I thought you said two members of the senate.

Mr. PETTUS. No, sir; I said there were two Republicans who would not vote for Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Well, on that matter I think the Senator will agree with me he is in error in the end.

Mr. PETTUS. It is possible that I am, because, now I recollect it, there is a man named Whitaker, who it was said voted for somebody else, but when I came to look for his name, now that I remember it, I could not find it.

Mr. MCCOMAS. If the Senator will allow me, Whitaker and Ashby—Whitaker, a senator, and Ashby, a member of the house—were absent on the first day of voting separately in the houses, and they were two Republicans. That gave Mr. SCOTT on the first day 46 votes and Mr. McGraw 46 votes. But on the next day, Whitaker and Ashby appeared, the one in the senate and the other in the house, and voted for Mr. SCOTT, giving 48 votes for SCOTT to 46 for McGraw and 1 for Goff. I know the Senator desires to be accurate in his statement.

Mr. PETTUS. Why, certainly I do, and I know the Senator from Maryland is a fair man, and he wants to deal fairly with all subjects. But it is absolutely immaterial in the cause and as to whether they were Democrats or Republicans. This man Haptonstall is one of the protestants here on this paper. It is immaterial who it was who voted or did not vote, so far as that is concerned; the question is as to their right to vote. But I thank the Senator for having corrected this inadvertence on my part.

The house of delegates was Democratic by a small majority. I beg Senators' attention to this part of the statement. In the senate objection was made to H. C. Getzendanner and E. G. Pierson being admitted to seats as senators on the ground that each of them after election in November, 1896, and after serving as senators in 1897, had accepted commissions as officers in the United States Army, an office of profit, and served as such officers, one as captain and the other as lieutenant.

At first these objections were laid on the table and the two persons objected to took their seats. Afterwards the matter was referred to the committee on privileges and elections, and the committee in substance found the facts as stated in the objection. But the committee found that each one of these Army officers had been discharged before the legislature met in January. Therefore the committee reported that Getzendanner and Pierson were still members, and this report was adopted by a party vote on the 24th day of January, 1899. This decision was made on a demand for the previous question and without debate.

It is proper to state here that the 24th day of January, the day on which this vote was taken, was the day on which each of the houses was to vote separately for Senator.

Now, it is insisted that this is no disqualification, or, if it is, that the senate of the State of West Virginia was a proper judge of the election and qualification of its own members.

Now, that, as a general rule, is a correct proposition. Furthermore, it is a general rule that when the senate of a State decides on the election or qualification of its own members this body does not ordinarily inquire into it—not at all in ordinary cases. There comes up a contest, facts are heard, the matter is decided, and this body has time and again said that they will let it remain where it was decided.

But that is not this case. Here two Senators regularly elected appeared and offered to take their seats. It was objected that those two Senators had resigned their seats by accepting office under the United States and that they could not be properly received in that body.

Now, Mr. President, I do not dispute the proposition of law as asserted by the Senator from Maryland, that that is the general rule where you decide on the election and qualification of members, but in all cases in the law courts fraud vitiates every business transaction, if it is sufficiently brought to the attention of the court and in proper form. So fraud in this very matter we are considering vitiates every such proceeding. This body has so declared, and the courts have so declared, and the Senator from Maryland has so declared in this very report itself. To be sure, he did not seem to see exactly how it fit. I desire to read a paragraph from the report of the Senator from Maryland. I call it his report. It is the report of the committee, but it was prepared by him. Here is what the Senator himself says:

> A majority of the committee do not mean to decide that the Senate could not refuse a seat to a claimant who is elected by a legislature which is itself directly and plainly the result of force or fraud. If, on the eve of a joint assembly, a majority in either house should cease to be judges of the elections and qualifications of members of the minority and become revolutionary conspirators; if, for instance, a majority should imprison enough minority members on the day of the joint convention to reverse the majority therein, we do not assert that the Senate should not inquire into such violence, force, and intimidation or that it could not declare that there was a joint convention in form only, but not in fact, and that there was no election therefore. In the past—

Just listen, Senators—

> In the past the Senate has investigated fraud and corruption in elections where the proceedings were regular and the form was lawful, and then declared there had been no election.

Now, Mr. President, in that connection I beg to read another paragraph from another report of this same committee. I believe it is good law. The committee says it is and it cites many authorities. This is the writing of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire:

> It is clear that if by bribery or corrupt practices on the part of the friends of a candidate who are conducting his canvass votes are obtained for him without which he would not have had a majority his election should be annulled, although proof is lacking that he knew of the bribery or corrupt practices.—Pomeroy's Case, Taft Election Cases, 330.

A number of authorities are cited to prove the proposition, and it is proved. Well, are you going to put a bridle on this Senate so as to prevent them from looking into all sorts of fraud and corruption in the election of one of your body? If you are going to do that, you had as well abandon business and give it over to fraudulent men, and men who can buy what they want.

Mr. President, on this subject that I am at present considering—that is to say, whether those two senators had a right to seats in that body—it does not depend upon any statute law; it does not depend upon any constitutional law. It has been the law of England from the very foundation of the common law to the present day. It is now and always has been the law in the United States and of every one of the States where the common law prevails.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator a question, with his permission.

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. Who denies that the right of the Senate to determine the election and qualifications of any one of its own members carries with it as an inseparable incident the right to review the proceedings of the legislature or body sending that man here?

Mr. PETTUS. It is denied in this report that we have the right to investigate this case.

Mr. ALLEN. Is it denied on any authority? I am speaking now entirely without reference to this case.

Mr. PETTUS. I do not know the authorities cited to that point, except one.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, suppose the regularly elected and duly constituted senate and house of representatives of the State had been driven out of their respective houses at the point of the bayonet and a revolutionary body calling itself a legislature had been installed in its place, and they had elected and sent a man here, would the Senate be precluded by their action from inquiring into the regularity of the election?

Mr. PETTUS. I think not. This report says they would not in such an extreme case.

Mr. ALLEN. Then, if such fraud, in place of actual and open violence, were used as would destroy the legality of the legislature, would not that equally destroy the legality of the election, and would not this Senate, in the exercise of its power to inquire into the election and qualifications of an applicant, have what we may perhaps call, for want of a better term, the power as on a writ of error to review all proceedings of the legislature which had a tendency to vitiate their action in that respect?

Mr. PETTUS. Why, of course, that is my opinion, and that is what I am going to try to prove.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] on this subject did injustice to his own very fair mind. He debated and cited for your consideration the case of General Lane, decided here during the civil war. The Senator ought not to have put that case here, as it is absolutely certain that a man of his great learning could not have believed a word in the decision of that case. It was a revolutionary case; it was in revolutionary times; it was in the midst of war. General Lane was a general, and he was a man who had to be considered; he was not a Silver Republican, nor a Gold Republican, and therefore his case had to be considered. It was considered. It was considered that it was necessary for the Senate to have him, and they had him.

But the Senator from Maryland knows that the case stands almost alone. He knows that the common law made that seat vacant; he knows that the Constitution of the United States made it vacant; he knows that the decisions all over the United States made it vacant; he knows that the report of the Judiciary Committee in the other body in the Wheeler case, a unanimous decision, declared that seat vacant. And the Senator from Maryland, as I say, did injustice to his great and fair intellect in even citing that case as an authority on a law question. He ought not to have done it. He ought to have stated, if he did do it, that the case was decided that way but that it was not the law. That was what he ought to have said, and that is the habit of the Senator because he comes from a judicial place where he has always been in the habit of declaring the law as he understood it.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MCCOMAS. If the Senator will allow me, I refrained from saying that I thought that a correct decision.

Mr. PETTUS. I notice that.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I do not think it a correct decision. I simply said that the Senate of the United States had once decided that question in the same fashion as the State senate. I am frank enough to say that I do not think the decision here was a correct one.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, when you get along side of a great lawyer and see him act and hear him talk, you know where he is going. Although he may cite a case, he would be hung before he would declare that to be the law. So it is with the Senator from Maryland. He knew that it was not the law. He knew that it was an accidental, sporadic case which occurred here during the war.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Not by way of argument.

Mr. PETTUS. A question I will submit to, but not to debate. I tell Senators it is not fair and it is not just to interrupt an argument of a Senator merely for the purpose of seeing if you can not debate the question better than the man who is on the floor. If the Senator wants information or wants to ask a question, I am perfectly willing to yield for him to ask it.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it might have been quite as courteous for the Senator to have assumed that I only intended to ask a question.

Mr. PETTUS. No, sir; because I have heard you debate questions under the form of asking questions so often. It was a necessary precaution. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. I will not interrupt the Senator. I merely intended to ask a question for information. I agree with the Senator upon one proposition he was making.

Mr. PETTUS. No, Mr. President, I do not agree at all with the practice in the Senate. I believe any gentleman has a right to interrupt another for the purpose of obtaining information, or as the Senator from Maryland interrupted me a while ago when I made a mistake about the number of Republicans. Interruptions of that sort are natural and they are right, and gentlemen ought to indulge in them whenever they see fit; but this way of just bulging into the middle of the argument of another gentleman on the floor is excessively bad manners if it does occur in the Senate of the United States so often. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, we were talking about two military Senators. I will call them. The Senator from Maryland comes up like the brave and fair lawyer that he is and says that the decision in the Lane case was not the law. It has always been the law in England that where a man holds one office and accepts another inconsistent with the discharge of the duties of the first he thereby resigns his first office. That has been the law from time immemorial.

I recollect an old case, away back yonder in the black-letter books, where a justice of the peace in England concluded that it would suit his purposes if he had the office of a constable also, and thereupon he applied for the office of constable and was appointed constable of his bailiwick. The case came up for judgment, to ascertain whether he was a justice of the peace any longer, and the judges said he was not; that by accepting the office of constable, which was utterly inconsistent with the office of justice of the peace, he had resigned his first office; it was vacant, and he could not discharge any of its functions. That is a simple case. It is away back in the black-letter books, and there is nothing to the contrary of it since.

You talk about the constitutions of the various States. There have been some people—not the Senator from Maryland—but there have been some people who have actually tried to fritter away the constitution of West Virginia in reference to this subject, which says that a man who holds an office of profit under the United States, or any other power, is ineligible to the office of member of the legislature of West Virginia. If he is ineligible, he can not hold the office lawfully. A man can not go into an office and go out of an office and come back into the office at his will and pleasure. An office is a continued thing. One term of an office can not be broken in two and renewed at the will of the man who holds it. If any man be ineligible to hold an office after he is elected to it, he goes out. How did he ever get back? He gets back merely by force of will or the vote of such men as voted against Mantle because he was a Silver Republican. That is the way they get back; and the only way. I hope there was never such a man in this Senate.

Mr. President, it is absolutely demonstrated that these two Senators resigned their seats in the senate of the State of West Virginia. How did they ever get back? Now, mind you, I am not going on those suppressed depositions or anything of that sort. I am arguing this case on the scanty testimony that was admitted; to be sure it was pretty large in volume. Here it is, most of it [exhibiting the journals of both houses]; and therein the committee of the senate of West Virginia reported that these two men did accept those offices of profit under the United States; that they did serve in the offices, but were discharged from the offices before the next session of the legislature met.

I do not depend only on that, because the committee was gracious enough to allow it to be stated in an agreement that the facts as stated in the objection to those two senators were true, and that is a part of the record also. That was this side-bar agreement, when they took in another agreement, which I shall comment on hereafter. So it is an established fact that these two senators, after they were elected in 1897, resigned their seats, went into the war as officers, and received the pay of the United States as officers. Then they came back and they knocked at the door of the senate, as General Wheeler has been knocking on two occasions at the door of the House of Representatives. He has resigned now; and when he did resign one of the most useful men

Alabama ever sent to the Congress of the United States got out of place. But those two men came and knocked at the door. They were not told, "The judiciary committee finds unanimously that you have resigned." They said, "Walk in, gentlemen; we want you." They did not even refer the matter to a committee at that time; not at all. They said, "You are Republicans; you will vote for Mr. SCOTT. We want you. Walk in."

Anyone on the face of the earth who had intended to deal fairly would have referred that matter to a committee on credentials; but they did not do it. An objection was made; a protest filed; but it went on the table as quickly as the words came out of the mouth of the man who made the motion. Afterwards they did refer the matter to the committee on credentials, and they actually got a report. They acted on the report on the very day that the two houses were to vote separately; there were but two; they had no difficulty in the world in declaring that these two were all right. I wish to God that the argument made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] in the Du Pont case on this identical question could have been laid before that senate of the State of West Virginia and that they might have read it to see that if they did give those men those seats for that fraudulent purpose, they were making a vast hole in the law of the land, to say nothing about their own oaths. The Senator from Connecticut argued this question in the Du Pont case, and he hardly left anything for any other man to say on the subject.

Now, Senators, here are two men who had resigned their seats and were reelected by the senate of West Virginia to vote for Mr. SCOTT. That vote, as I told you, was taken on the 24th day of January.

And on the same day—

Now, just look, Senators, for here is where the whole thing is colored and branded in letters that a blind man could almost see. Look at the fraud—

And on the same day (January 24, 1899) two petitions for contests of seats in the senate were presented to the senate as follows:
J. H. Collins, Republican, against J. H. Marcum, Democrat, and D. M. Shirkey, Republican, against Walter L. Ashby, Democrat.

On January 20, 1899, the following resolution was offered by Mr. White:

As there is a contest pending in this senate against Walter L. Ashby, a member of said senate from the ninth senatorial district: Therefore, be it
Resolved, That said Walter L. Ashby be suspended—

Notice the words, Senators—be suspended from voting or discussing any matter that may come up before this body until said contest is settled.

Suspended! In the name of common sense and reason, where did any legislative body ever get the right merely to suspend a man because somebody had happened to claim his seat without any proceeding whatever to ascertain any fact in connection with it? That resolution was merely offered. Senators, I am speaking of it now as a preparation for the fraud that it was intended to commit. It is a very interesting subject for a man when he succeeds in a scheme of fraud and corruption like this.

This resolution, under the rules, went over. And at the same time, January 20, 1899, Mr. White offered another resolution in these words:

Resolved, That R. F. Kidd, from the fourth senatorial district, now holding a seat in the senate of the State of West Virginia, was not duly elected on the 8th day of January, 1898, but B. M. Morris was duly elected—

That is a mistake. It ought to have been the 8th day of November, 1898—

Therefore,
Be it resolved, That said R. F. Kidd vacate his seat in the senate of West Virginia, and M. B. Morris, of Gilmer County, be required to be sworn in as a member of said body.

That was not adopted, either. It went over under the rules. There is where they undertook to decide that Kidd never was elected, but the stomachs of the senators of West Virginia revolted at asserting in black and white any such miserable falsehood as that; and they would not do that—oh, no, they would not do that. They had not got up to the notch at that time.

On January 21 Mr. Latham offered the following resolution—

These are Republican senators offering Republican resolutions for Republican corruptions—

Whereas a contest has been instituted by J. H. Collins against James H. Marcum for a seat in the senate as a senator from the sixth senatorial district, and believing that, pending the further investigation of the case, justice and right dictate that said seat be declared vacant—

Pending the contest, justice and right required that the said seat should be declared vacant—

Resolved, That the seat in the senate now occupied by James H. Marcum as a senator from the sixth senatorial district be declared vacant; that the committee on privileges and elections be instructed to make a thorough investigation of the case and have power to send for persons and papers and any ballots in dispute, and to take such pertinent evidence as may be offered by either party, and that said Collins and Marcum be granted leave to appear before said committee in person and by counsel, and that pending such investigation neither James H. Marcum nor J. H. Collins be permitted to participate in the proceedings of the senate nor to occupy a seat therein.

Oh, Mr. President, the debauchery of such infernal proceedings can not be too strongly characterized. On January 23 White offered a resolution about Kidd, and the stomachs of his associates revolted at the nauseating dose; they were not willing to assert a miserable lie, and they all knew it to be a lie; and therefore they thought they would circumvent it, and here is the circumvention:

On January 23, 1899, the resolution offered by Mr. White, unseating Kidd and seating Morris, was called up and a substitute was offered by Mr. Smith.

Mr. Smith would do a lie, but he would not tell it. That is the amount of it, and here it is:

Whereas there is now pending in the senate a contest between R. F. Kidd and B. M. Morris for a seat as senator from the Fourth senatorial district of this State: and
Whereas said contest has been referred to the committee on privileges and elections, where the same is pending, and can not be determined for a considerable length of time—

That is a horrible state of affairs. A Republican came in and contested the seat of a Democrat, and the contest could not be decided for a considerable length of time. Therefore—

Whereas it is the opinion of the senate that pending said contest—

Just notice, Senators, "pending said contest"—

B. M. Morris should be entitled to said seat.

Pending the contest they wanted Morris's vote for SCOTT; he needed one; he needed it badly; and he needed it then. They determined to have it. Here is a man duly and legally and constitutionally elected, whom every man knew to be elected, who produced his credentials and was put on the list of the secretary of state, and went and took his seat, and was duly sworn; and he was never sworn any more—I want you to remember that also—he was sworn once, and he never was sworn any more; and they resolved that this good Republican, Morris, should occupy his seat pro tempore, pro hac vice—that is what it is—for the time; for the election of SCOTT; and for nothing else. That is what it was for; that is what it states in substance, until it is decided that Morris is to come in and Kidd is to go out. Well, if you search this thing a little longer you will find that that resolution was adopted; that Morris did go in, and Kidd did go out for the time being and for the purposes of SCOTT's election.

Just by way of winding up that subject, I will merely say, if you press it a little further, the election came off on the 25th day of January; and on the 7th day of February there was a unanimous report that Kidd was entitled to his seat. There had never been a particle of testimony taken after that time—not a particle—and there was a unanimous report to the senate that Kidd was entitled to a seat; and he was seated by a unanimous vote, but he was never sworn in any more; and he got his pay from the first day, or at least I believe he got pay from the first day—I ought not to say that, because I got it in the wrong place.

Mr. MORGAN. How did you get it?
Mr. PETTUS. How did I get it?
Mr. MORGAN. That fact about the pay?
Mr. PETTUS. I got it out of these mysterious depositions.
Mr. MORGAN. Out of the depositions?
Mr. PETTUS. I got it out of place; not in the evidence; and therefore I did not want to state it just now. But right here are the vouchers [exhibiting] and they are about as dirty a set as ever you saw in your life under the sun. Here they are. [Exhibiting the journals.] We were allowed to look at them; but no further, except into an agreement that was made by counsel. You know how much of an agreement counsel make. They will give you what they can not help giving you, a half loaf if they can not be required to give you a whole one; and they will give you a quarter of a loaf if the committee will require you to put up with that; and that is just about what it got here—a quarter of a loaf.

Kidd went back. He went back by the unanimous vote of all the senators there. He went back on the 7th day of February, after his absence from the senate had accomplished the very purpose for which he was sent out, to wit, the election of Mr. SCOTT. Keep the fact in mind, Senators, that Mr. SCOTT was elected by only 1 vote. And they say that in the Senate of the United States we can not examine into fraud like that. It may be so; it may be that Mr. SCOTT was neither a Silver Republican nor a Gold Republican and therefore we have no ground to vote against him—I do not know whether that is true or not—on the standard set up by the Senator from New Hampshire. I do not believe Senators can do such things as the senior Senator from New Hampshire charges them with.

Now, Morris went in, as I have shown, and took his seat under this resolution pro tempore et pro hac vice, and he voted for Mr. SCOTT in the election which was held in the separate houses. But it so happened that Mr. SCOTT did not get a majority on that occasion. SCOTT had 46 votes—I am speaking now of the votes in the two houses, the separate votes, on the 24th day of January—McGraw got 46, and 2 scattered. On the 24th day of January, when the vote for United States Senator was taken in each house separately, there were pending contests in the senate and in the house. There was the case of Brohard vs. Dent, which was a contest pending in the house, and that was disposed of in the manner I shall speak of hereafter.

After this vote which was taken on the 24th day of January it was demonstrated that if Mr. SCOTT could get one more vote he could be declared elected. He got Morris's vote, but he had to get another vote, or he had to increase his proportion of the vote. He had to have one more vote. The question was how to get it. There are some very smart people in West Virginia. They went to bargaining. Those who framed the bargain are not very plainly seen. Oh, you can see them in the window, if you will look out. They do not stand in front. They do not do the negotiating. The subalterns have to do that. Then after the first vote for United States Senator five Democrats of the house and five Republicans of the Senate made a written agreement as to how the election should be conducted, and that agreement is copied into the majority report, and I propose to read the whole of it. That is another thing that Senator SCOTT's counsel graciously and indulgently allowed the committee to receive as evidence. So I am not going out of the record, as my friend the Senator from Maryland accused me yesterday. Here is the agreement made by the five Democrats in the house and five Republicans in the senate, and it made it a mathematical certainty that Mr. SCOTT would be counted in the next day, and you can see it on its face:

To the Republican senators:

And those very words used at the top make the fraud manifest, as I shall proceed to show hereafter if I get a chance.

GENTLEMEN: In order to bring about a peaceful and orderly settlement of the differences now existing between the two houses of the West Virginia legislature, we submit to you the following propositions, viz:

(1) The election and qualification of the member of the house of delegates from Taylor County—to be heard and tried upon its merits.

(2) The election and qualification of a senator from the Fourth senatorial district, to be heard and tried upon its merits.

That is Kidd and Morris.

(3) These two cases to be finally voted upon in each house on the 7th day of February, 1899—

Just about twelve or fourteen days after the election—

After 2 o'clock p. m. of that day—

It was very precise—with privilege to any party to take any evidence pertinent up and until noon of February 6, 1899, when the taking of evidence shall be closed.

It never commenced after that.

(4) All contests and controversies as to the membership of each house other than the two above named to be dismissed, and no further contests or controversies respecting the membership therein to be brought or entertained by either house.

(5) Pending the investigation hereinabove referred to, neither Dent—

The sitting member—

Neither Dent, Brohard, Kidd, or Morris shall vote, in joint assembly or otherwise.

"In joint assembly." What in the world was the use of putting in "joint assembly?" What did the joint assembly have to do with a member of the senate of that State? The words themselves carry along a world of meaning.

Pending the investigation hereinbefore referred to, neither Dent, Brohard, Kidd, or Morris shall vote, in joint assembly or otherwise.

(6) All resolutions now pending in either house looking to unseating any member thereof, or questioning the seat of any sitting member, shall be dismissed.

It left SCOTT a majority pro tempore et pro hac vice. His majority lasted long enough to vote for him and no longer, and here a majority of all the members of both houses of the West Virginia legislature tell you that that was a fraudulent transaction and you are asked to set it aside.

Mr. President, that agreement was carried out; that is to say, the senate enacted a resolution carrying out its part of it and the house enacted a resolution carrying out its part of it. Oh, but they tell us Morris did not vote. Morris did not vote. I know he did not. He had no right to vote. He never had a semblance of a right to vote. He did vote on the 24th. That showed the corrupt intent and motive of the thing, but when they could bargain him out and bargain it so that they did not have any use for Morris's vote, they turned him and Kidd both out. Kidd went out along with Morris for the time being.

In the house the Dent and Brohard matter went over. Thereupon Mr. SCOTT lost two adversaries at one blow. He got rid of two Democrats at one time by this agreement, and he had no longer any need for Morris, though he had been used corruptly the day before. Now, Senators, just look at this case on this aspect and on this little piece of testimony which has been allowed to go before you. I now intend to open the other end of the case. Senators, it is one of the most miserable things that ever was perpetrated on a free people. How did it begin? They had an election in November, 1898, for members of the senate and members of the house, about one-half of the senators, I believe, holding over. You would be astonished to see what sort of people participated in this transaction. The very first bounce was from the governor of the State. When I read it it made me sick, that the governor of a great Commonwealth should get down in the dirt of politics and mix up with this swindling thing. Here it is, the very first step that was taken in this programme.

There was a man named Pritchard, who ran against a man named Ash in Marion County. Ash was elected and Pritchard defeated. Ash went and took his seat in the senate and nobody objected to him at the time. That is one of these contests that I have been reading about, where they were going to suspend the fellow. Listen to the governor—how he talks, how pure, how elevating, what a grand, high plane he speaks from:

CHARLESTON, KANAWHA COUNTY, W. VA., November 29, 1898.

Capt. A. L. PRITCHARD:

Party interests demand contest in your case.
We will pay all expenses. Please wire Kendall to proceed immediately.

The governor of the State of West Virginia getting away down into the mudsills of the vile thing and inaugurating the proceeding himself!

Party interests demand contest in your case.

The contest did not get there until the 20th or 23d of January. They had in that State a secretary of state. He happened to be a Republican. It happened also—the civil-service rules ought to be amended and extended to West Virginia—that he was chairman of the Republican executive committee of the State as well as secretary of state. He did not have to go far for the seal. I beg of you gentlemen who are so much in favor of the civil service that you will send it over to West Virginia. It is badly needed in Charleston.

Mr. ELKINS. How about Alabama?

Mr. PETTUS. I am talking about Charleston. The Senator's picture is in this thing. Do not get impatient. I will get to you after a while.

Mr. ELKINS. All right.

Mr. PETTUS. Now, here is the secretary of state and chairman of the Republican committee, and also Mr. White, the secretary. He is the collector of revenue in that district, and he is secretary of the executive committee. You need the civil service very badly over there, and a little streak of honesty in your elections would do a good deal of good, too. This is to Capt. A. L. Pritchard, manager, dated the same day, the 29th day of November, 1898:

Republican State executive committee request you to allow the use of your name in contest proceeding to protect interests of Republican party. All costs and expenses will be paid by us.

Hiring a man to go into this dirty business and telling him, "We will pay all your expenses; do not be uneasy on that score." Mind you, I am talking from these suppressed depositions. That is where I get this from, not from hearsay, but from the very thing itself.

These two telegrams happened to go to the wrong man, that is all. There was a Capt. A. L. Pritchard, as I understand from the testimony, but the man who did not get elected was named A. N. Pritchard, and he was no captain, either. The captain, as you see, was a man who stood head and shoulders above his uncle, A. N., and he was a Democrat. These telegrams went to the captain, and they did not go to the defeated candidate. I think the testimony shows that that is the way they got here, else they never would have been talked of.

Now, that is the way the proceeding was commenced, and the testimony goes on to show that they invited all of the defeated candidates for senators to come to Charleston for the purpose of instituting contests and occupying their seats, if necessary, and the testimony further goes to show that they openly, publicly, and aboveboard threatened to turn out all of the newly elected senators in the State of West Virginia who were Democrats and to put Republicans in their places.

This is not a piece of testimony coming from one man or two men, but the whole air is full of it, and men testified positively to these threats. They declared that if the Democrats did not agree with them as to how this difficulty should be settled, they would disband the house of delegates and make a new house of delegates of their own with the members that they would take out of the old house. They had the governor, they had the attorney-general, they had the senate, and the house of delegates was by itself. "If the Democrats do not consent to what we propose, we will organize a house of delegates." More than that, the attorney-general of the State, who does not seem to like fraud near so well, went into this Brohard and Dent case.

The trial was before the committee in the house of delegates. They adhere to the old Virginia name. He went into the contest as lawyer in a disputed case pending before the committee on privileges and elections in the house of delegates, and he argued the case for his Republican friend. And right there in the committee, in the presence of men who used to be as brave as any who ever lived—I do not know how they are now, but they used to be—he told them, in substance, "If you seat that man Logan, this city will run with blood," talking to a committee of a supposed independent branch of the legislative body. I am telling you now what is shown in these depositions that the committee never saw any point in or never allowed to be read or never allowed to be retaken; and they are not allowed to be talked about now.

There is one peculiar feature, and I call the attention of my friend the Senator from Maryland to it again. I did it before any of these things came up here. We talked about it when we were writing our several reports. You notice that the Senator from Maryland attaches a large degree of importance to the form in which that agreement was made. I will go back to that now. I promise you that I would have something to say about it.

To the Republican Senators:

GENTLEMEN: In order to bring about a peaceful and orderly settlement, etc.

We Democrats propose to you Republicans. The Senator from Maryland very justly says—he wrote that before I called his attention to it, and he lays emphasis upon it in his report—that the Democrats proposed that settlement. According to these depositions there is not a word of truth in that proposition. The Senator evidently attaches importance to it, else he never would have reviewed it in that way. He says: "Here it is, a proposition of the Democrats to the Republicans, and the Republicans merely accepted it; that is all." Well, anybody would say he has a pretty good theory to go on, but it only existed after the depositions were excluded. It did not exist in fact, and I will show you. It was a mere theory; and you can establish almost any theory if you will knock out all of the opposing facts. Now, just listen to one of these depositions on that identical point:

Very soon after the unseating of Kidd—

That is, on the 24th day of January—

Very soon after the unseating of Kidd I was met by Hon. Z. I. Vinson, of Huntington, chairman of the Gold Democratic State committee, at the Hotel Ruffner, who invited me to a conference with himself and John T. McGraw in John T. McGraw's room. He said that Senators Fast, Marshall, and others, though they acted with their party in unseating Kidd, did not approve of such revolutionary tactics and wished to make a compromise fair and just to all concerned under which they could break away from their party associations.

Just listen to this!

That is the proposition that comes to the Democrats. It came to the Democratic chairman and to the Democratic candidate.

He stated that if a sufficient number of Democrats in the house to carry the resolution through the house, in conjunction with the Republicans, would agree to the proposition he had to make, that enough Republicans in the senate would agree to such a resolution to carry the proposition in the upper branch of the State legislature. His proposition had the essential features of the agreement as it was finally signed.

He said at the time that should Senator ELKINS and Chairman Dawson learn what was going on before it was done they would put a stop to it, and urged that if the Democrats wished to retain their newly elected senators and to reseat Kidd, who had already been unseated, that they act with all speed, while those Republicans who had cooperated with their party in unseating Kidd were repentant and willing to act the part of honest officials and conscientious citizens. He was requested, either by myself or Mr. McGraw, to put his proposition in writing.

The Democrats made the proposition, it is said. This man who came from the Republicans was requested to put it in writing, and he did put it in writing.

He did so then and there, and the proposition filed herewith is the original proposition then and there drafted, except as to the striking out of the word "conservative" and the change of dates in section 3.

That is from the 10th to the 7th of February.

Figuring what the result would be under the compromise agreement it was seen at once that the Democrats could not elect a United States Senator by a party vote, but the advantage of retaining the legislature in its integrity and of preventing any further revolutionary tactics upon the part of the Republicans, and the undoing of the great wrong that had already been done Senator Kidd, was regarded by us as of too great advantage to be lightly thrown aside, particularly in the face of the evident purpose of the Republicans to further increase their majority by throwing out additional hold-over senators.

They call the hold-over senators there two ways. Before they come in the old ones are called "hold-overs." After they come in together the new ones are called "hold-overs."

I therefore, after discussing the length of time allowed for maturing the contests and objecting to any greater delay than February 4, which was inserted in the paper, took the paper to the capitol and in fifteen minutes had the necessary number of signatures of the Democratic members of the house of delegates. The paper was then handed to Mr. Vinson, and he stated that he would immediately obtain the signatures of the Republican senators. The next time I saw the paper was that evening, when it was handed to me by George W. McClintic, who had been acting as counsel for the Republican committee in the Republican contest cases. The dates of hearing the contest cases had been changed in the paper from the 4th day of February to the 10th day of February, Mr. McClintic stating that this much time was necessary in order to mature the contest cases.

The Democrats objected to this delay, as needed legislation had already been delayed too long. We were in the hall of the house of delegates, and there was a considerable dispute before the opening of the night session as to this change in date. Very much to the surprise of the Democrats, who supposed that the leaders of the Republican party were neither aware of the agreement nor approved of it, many of the latter appeared to participate in the discussion. W. M. O. Davidson, chairman of the Republican State committee, and the secretary of the committee, A. B. White, of Parkersburg, and others appeared as though interested in the proceedings.

The speaker of the house called the house to order, and, on motion, it was adjourned in a very few minutes; and by arrangement the signers of the agreement and those proposing the same agreed to meet at the Ruffner Hotel, and did later gather at the room of Speaker McKinney. Here were present Senator STEPHEN B. ELKINS, Congressman B. B. DOVENER, Chairman Dawson, and other leaders of the Republican party. All seemed to be fully cognizant of the terms of the agreement and fully advised as to the difference between the parties having it under consideration. After some discussion the change in time to the 7th of February was agreed upon, and resolutions carrying out the terms of the agreement were spread on the records of the two houses the following morning, which was the day of the joint convention.

There is the agreement. Six Democrats and 6 Republicans under their advisers agreed to turn out 2 Democratic votes, suspend them for the time being, in order that Mr. SCOTT might be elected.

Well, Senators, that is the case as presented by the evidence. I do not mean evidence; I mean the depositions.

Now, the question before this body is, Has that case been fairly investigated? I say it has not and that these facts demonstrate that it has not. Here a governor, a senate, an attorney-general, the secretary of state, and other high officials agree together to revolutionize that legislature, and give notice that they will do it if their propositions are not complied with, and they were complied with, and the 2 senators who had resigned their seats voted for Mr. SCOTT and 2 Democrats were hoisted up into the air so high that they could not vote against him.

Now, has that case been fairly investigated? There have been no witnesses; not one. Senators, until you believe that the class that the Senator from New Hampshire describes as men who vote on mere caprice and whim, vote against a man because he is a Silver Republican and against a man because he is a Gold Republican, until you get in that debauched frame of mind, you are bound to see that this case was not fairly investigated. Oh, you can send thousands of miles to the West and gather up hundreds of witnesses. When it suits your purpose, you can do that, and spend for the country thousands upon thousands of dollars without any stint of hand; but when it comes to investigate an arrant case of fraud right here at your door, you close the door to any testimony whatever except that which is admitted by the counsel for the Senator occupying the seat.

Senators, we ought to act as judges. We ought to strike a straight line. You are bound to do it, unless you are debauched, like the Senator from New Hampshire says you are. I never said it, and God forbid that I should ever have cause to say it.

Mr. President, before this case is ended I want to enter a motion. I will enter it now, if the Secretary will be so kind as to write it down.

I move that the report and resolution in the case of Senator N. B. SCOTT, from West Virginia, be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections with instructions to investigate the case fully by all such legal evidence as may be presented to them.

Of course I do not expect this motion to be acted on until you come to vote on the whole case.

I thank you, gentlemen, for your kind attention.

Mr. TURLEY. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections who joined in the majority report, I wish to state briefly my views on the questions involved, especially as when I differ from the Senator from Alabama I feel as though there is some likelihood of my being in error. But I have never had clearer convictions about the law of a case and about the power of this body over the facts as presented here than I have in this case.

The case turns on three facts, I may say; that is, it turns on the action of the house of delegates of West Virginia, in a contest between a man named Brohard, who was a Republican, and Dent, who was a Democrat; the action of the senate in two cases, one the contest between Morris, who was a Republican, and Kidd, a Democrat, and the other the cases of the two senators who entered the United States Army during the Spanish war.

Now, in the case in the house, the case of Brohard against Dent, as I understand the records of the legislature of West Virginia, the house referred the claims of both these contestants to its committee on privileges and elections in a regular and formal way; that there were two reports brought in, and on those reports the house fixed a day when they should be considered; and that when that day arrived, they were considered and Mr. Dent was seated.

Now, that is the record, the judgment of the action of the house of delegates of West Virginia which is presented here. When we come to the case of Morris against Kidd in the house, it was a Democrat contesting a Republican's seat; in the senate it was a Republican contesting a Democrat's seat. That case, I believe, went to the committee on privileges and elections. I know it did at one time. But on the 23d of January, 1899, the house solemnly adjudged that Morris was entitled to the seat pending the contest, and it turned Kidd out and put Morris in.

Mr. PETTUS. That was the senate.

Mr. TURLEY. Yes, that is the senate. They turned Kidd out and put Morris in. That is the judgment that is brought here before the Senate of the United States. A further provision of that judgment of the senate of West Virginia was that Morris was entitled to the seat pending the contest.

Now afterwards the resolution was passed in the senate and also in the house, as I understand it, fixing the days when these contests should be acted on and decided, reciting in the resolutions that that would give time for both sides to be heard, and when that day rolled around the contests were decided. Morris was ousted of the seat into which he had been inducted by the judgment of the senate during the pendency of the contest, and Kidd was restored, and Dent, as I stated, was placed in the seat in the house. In the house neither contestant was allowed to take the seat until the contest was over.

Mr. SPOONER. The house was Democratic?

Mr. TURLEY. The house was Democratic and the senate was Republican, but I never considered that in construing this case. I will say a few words about that view of it before I conclude.

Now, when we come to the two Senators who joined the Army of the United States——

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to have the Senator's view on one point, if he will allow a question.

Mr. TURLEY. Yes, sir; I will be glad to give it.

Mr. PETTUS. Do you believe a legislative body has power to suspend a sitting member and put another man in his seat without any investigation whatever?

Mr. TURLEY. Well, I believe it ought not to do it.

Mr. PETTUS. I am talking about the power.

Mr. TURLEY. Yes; I believe it has the power to do it. I believe it ought not to do it without an investigation and without evidence. But if the Senator wants my view on this question, it is that the legislature of a State, when we once find out that it is a constitutional, regularly organized legislature, has just exactly the same power over the questions as to who are entitled to seats in that body as this body has to determine who are entitled to seats here. In other words, they are coordinate courts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator suspend?

Mr. PETTUS. I wish to ask the Senator one other question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will excuse the Chair while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2355) in relation to the suppression of insurrection in, and to the government of, the Philippine Islands, ceded by Spain to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898.

Mr. CHANDLER. At the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, who, I think, is not in the Chamber, I ask that the bill may go over until to-morrow, retaining its place as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may go over until to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. PETTUS. May I ask the Senator also for his opinion on one point?

Mr. TURLEY. Certainly. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. PETTUS. Do you believe that a legislative body in this country has a right, without any investigation, to turn a man out, temporarily suspend him, and give the seat to another man, without any investigation, when it requires two-thirds of the votes to expel him?

Mr. TURLEY. I believe it has the power. Of course it might appear on the face of the record that two-thirds did not join in it, but suppose that two-thirds do join, without investigation, I say that the legislature—the constitutional, regularly organized legislature of the State—has the power. Whether it is wisely executed or not, or whether it is corruptly executed or not, or wrongfully executed or not, is a different question. It has the same power that we have here. It is just like two chancery courts or two circuit courts of coordinate jurisdiction. If the record shows that the judge of a chancery court has tried the case, when another court comes to review it, fraud and corruption out of the way, it is not a question as to whether he has heard sufficient evidence, whether he has taken the testimony of a sufficient number of witnesses, whether he has unjustly ruled out evidence. That is a question to be reviewed in an appellate proceeding, and this Senate has no appellate jurisdiction over the legislature of the State.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question.

Mr. TURLEY. I would be glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. CULBERSON. Presuming that the constitution of West Virginia provides that the senate and house shall be the sole judge of the qualification and election of their members——

Mr. TURLEY. It does so provide.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Constitution of the United States provides that the Senate of the United States shall be the sole judge of the qualifications and election of members here, and it also provides that that Constitution shall be the supreme law of the land, any constitution or law of any State to the contrary notwithstanding. I will ask the Senator what figure that provision of the Constitution cuts, in his judgment, on the question he is discussing?

Mr. TURLEY. Do you mean the figure that Congress——

Mr. CULBERSON. That the Constitution of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land.

Mr. TURLEY. I do not think it has the slightest application to the question. I do not think it was ever intended to apply to any such question.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator another question, because I am only seeking information. I have no opinion formed upon the case. I will ask him to state what are the precedents in this body as to the right of the Senate of the United States to inquire into the organization of legislatures which have elected United States Senators.

Mr. TURLEY. I am just going to give one, one which is exactly a parallel to this, under which, if I remember, one of the most distinguished Senators who ever occupied a seat in this body took his seat here, and I will read a quotation from the report in that case. It is from David Turpie's case, and I understand there is no precedent in the Senate which is to the contrary.

> This body is made by the Constitution the judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its members. The senate of Indiana is likewise the judge of the election, qualifications, and returns of its own members. We must determine all questions arising out of the proceedings of the electors. But who sustain the character of electors is to be determined by the legislative body of the State. We can not inquire into the motive which controlled its judgment.

Now, in that case, as far as the record shows, which is a part of the records of the Senate, two men were turned out and two others were put into the senate of Indiana, so far as can be seen, without one particle of proof being taken. This same attack was made there that is made here—that this Senate had, under the power of appeal or this doctrine of writ of error, revisory power over the acts of the legislature, and that it could review the acts of the senate of Indiana in seating these two men, because it was claimed here that it was done illegally and without evidence.

But the Senate decided in that case that it is exclusively for the legislature of the State to determine who are members of that legislature; that it is within the jurisdiction of this body to determine whether it is a constitutional and legal legislature, properly organized under the Constitution of the United States and of the State, but that this body can not go into the inquiry whether this and that member and that member and that member are properly entitled to their seats in the senate or house of the legislature of a State.

Why, think where the doctrine would lead. I appeal to Democrats on this doctrine, because, as I understand it, it is a cherished principle of our party that the State legislatures are as supreme within their jurisdiction as is the Congress of the United States. Think where it would lead us to. You never could have a contest over the right of a Senator to take his seat here but what charges might be brought.

Suppose it is a case, just as it is here, where 1 majority decided, and it is said, "This man who cast the deciding vote secured his election to the legislature by bribery"—in other words, that he bought his way into the legislature—and the record is produced here where the legislature had investigated that very question and decided it in the man's favor and held that he was entitled to a seat, under this doctrine here we are to reopen that investigation. So, too, if another man was alleged to be ineligible because he was under age and the legislature passed on that question, the Senate could open it up again; and if it was a case where there were 10 majority, as many causes of ineligibility as the law allows could be brought against 10 members, and the Senate be called upon to try every one of those cases, although the legislature of the State itself had tried them and rendered its decision.

Mr. SPOONER. The action of the legislature could not be changed in the State by a court or anybody else.

Mr. TURLEY. Nowhere; it is the last and final court of resort. There is no power on earth that can supervise it or revise it any more than there is power over the action of this body here when it once decides who is a member of it.

Mr. PETTUS. I will ask the Senator one more question, if he will allow me.

Mr. TURLEY. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. Suppose 10 foreigners and 10 infants compose part of a legislative body, and that fact appeared on the record of the legislature, what would you do then?

Mr. TURLEY. You might have a case of that sort where it would appear on the record of a legislature that it was not a legal and constitutional legislature. You are assuming facts that would destroy its character as a legislature. But let me put this case to you: Suppose proceedings were had in the legislature on a contest over a Senatorship or any State officer who had to be elected by the legislature, and one side charged that 10 members of the legislature are foreigners and 10 over here are infants, and the record showed that the legislature investigated those charges and rendered a solemn judgment that the 10 were not foreigners and the 10 were not infants; I say if the facts were again realleged here in the Senate——

Mr. PETTUS. If the Senator will allow me, suppose the legislature determines on the record that 10 of them are foreigners and 10 of them are infants, and still seated them, what are you going to do then?

Mr. TURLEY. That is not this case here. You might have a case then where you would destroy the legal organization of the legislature by its own records. That is not the case here. The case here is that it is insisted that the Senate shall reopen this question, because it does not appear affirmatively on the record that evidence was taken in the trial of these cases.

Now, when you go into these depositions you can find a great deal in those matters, but I plant myself here in this report on the principle that the judgment of a State legislature on the qualifications of its members and their right to a seat is as conclusive on this body as it is on every citizen of the State in which that legislature exists. It is as binding on us as it is on the men who have to obey the laws of that legislature. Could a citizen of any one of these States say, when he is accused of violating some law of that State, "Ah, well, I am not guilty, because some man sat in that legislature and cast a deciding vote on it who was not entitled to vote," even though the record showed the judgment of the legislature that he was entitled to sit and entitled to vote? It is just as binding here as it is there. Now, the same principle applies to all these cases.

In the determination of the question as to whether the two soldiers were ineligible or not, the constitution of West Virginia was construed by the legislature. It was the final tribunal to decide it upon the facts. The facts were that between two sessions of the legislature these two members joined the Army, I believe went to Cuba, or at least served during the time for which they were enlisted, and were discharged from the Army before the legislature reassembled, so that during the actual sittings of the legislature they were not members of the Army. Now, whether the decision of the legislature was right or not is a question of law I am not going to discuss, but it is as binding as if it had been passed on by the supreme court of West Virginia.

Suppose there was a provision under the constitution of West Virginia, as there is in some States, that questions of this sort, instead of being passed on by the legislature, shall be referred to the supreme court, and that was the tribunal to pass on it, and it solemnly decided as a matter of law that the facts, as they existed with reference to these two men, did not render them ineligible to a seat, has this body got the right to revise that? Are we to institute a practice here by which appeals are taken and writs of error filed here with this body to supervise every step taken by a State legislature? If we are, we had better abolish the States to-day and make them simply counties or mere subdivisions of the General Government. Now, that is the case itself.

As to what was done there, as to whether the course pursued by these members of the legislature in the capital of West Virginia was wrong or was a crime against the citizens of West Virginia, I am not going to take time to go into it. The one body was Republican and the other was Democratic. It seems that the leaders on each side got to trading amongst themselves. Well, if we went into the history of these things I expect we would be surprised at the amount of important legislation and the number of important events which have resulted from informal agreements between parties on each side, afterwards ratified by the body in its constitutional and legal capacity, because what was done under this agreement was carried out by the judgment of the legislature itself. Whether it was wrongfully given or not, whether it was a crime against the citizens of West Virginia or not, is a question for the citizens of West Virginia to settle when they call these public officers to account in a subsequent election, and it is not a question for the Senate of the United States to go to West Virginia and overthrow its legislature and its government and investigate every act which occurred from the beginning of that legislature down to its end, because there is where it would lead to. There would not be a single transaction hardly, under this doctrine for which the Senator from Alabama contends, that would not be open to the supervision of the Senate of the United States.

I protest against any such doctrine as that. I do not justify what was done there. Whether it could have been avoided or not is a question that I do not know enough about to determine; whether those Democrats who went into that agreement were justified or not, whether the Republicans were justified or not, is a question that I do not consider. I plant myself on the broad proposition that the regularly organized constitutional legislature of a State is supreme on these matters, and that to hold differently would be absolutely destructive of the rights that are left to the States.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I rose when the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY] did, but I might well omit to speak, because he has stated the case so clearly. I shall, however, occupy a few moments in stating my view of the four points of objection that are made to the title of Senator SCOTT, of West Virginia. I shall not discuss the Quay case; that is in the past. I shall not discuss the Montana case; that is in the future. I will confine myself to the West Virginia case.

Mr. President, the first of the four objections to the title of the Senator from West Virginia was the claim that he was not a resident of the State. It appears that at one time while a resident of the State he came to Washington and served very creditably as Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The whole committee agreed that there was nothing to this objection.

The next point was that the seats of Senators Getzendanner and Pierson were vacant because they had been for a time officers in the Army. Mr. President, the constitution of West Virginia is very strong on that point; but Senators know perfectly well that many acts are characterized in the expressions of statutes and constitutions as void which are only voidable. In this case the question whether these officers had lost their seats in the senate because they had served in the American Army against Spain was taken up formally and deliberately by the senate of West Virginia, and it was decided that they had not. It seems to me that there can be no sound argument made to a modern tribunal, whether a court of law or the Senate of the United States, that these offices were so completely void that they could not be held to be filled by their original occupants by the judgment of the senate of West Virginia.

The third point is the one which has just been discussed by the Senator from Tennessee so fully; and that is the objection growing out of the agreement entered into by the leading Republicans and Democrats in the legislature, concerning the temporary disposition of certain contested-election cases which were to be taken up by agreement at a date fixed, which date would be after the vote had been taken for the election of a Senator.

There were not only pending the two cases of Morris against Kidd in the State senate, and Dent against Brohard in the house, but there were many other cases; there were eight in the house, and there were efforts being made to originate other contests. The Senator from Alabama has stated the efforts that were made to bring on other contests, and has severely criticised the governor of the State for his effort to bring on a certain contest. Whether this was or was not a comfortable condition of affairs need not be decided here.

The fact existed that two sets of excited men were facing each other; that contests were being inaugurated all over the State against Democrats in the senate and against Republicans in the house; and that there was very great danger that there would be such a conflict in West Virginia that there would be two legislatures, which would be very injurious to the State and very injurious to the United States.

So, Mr. President, under those circumstances an agreement was entered into. The Democratic senators proposed to the Republican senators in a signed paper, which the Republicans also signed, that there should be a suspension of hostilities, that there should be a stoppage of this work of disintegration and destruction, until after the election of a United States Senator.

Mr. President, I can imagine an agreement of that kind which would be so objectionable that the Senate would take notice of it. If it had been an agreement that was corruptly entered into, if that had been proved, we perhaps ought to take notice of it. If it had been an agreement that had been brought about through violence, or threats of violence serious in their nature, then I might perhaps agree with the Senator from Alabama that the Senate should take notice of it.

But, Mr. President, there is nothing to indicate that violence existed or was threatened, except a slight remark of the attorney-general, to which I shall allude when speaking of the fourth point. There was nothing of that kind, and the agreement, which is found in the committee's report made by the learned Senator and great lawyer from the State of Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], is an agreement commendable in every way. I have read it through carefully several times to see whether there is the slightest element in that agreement which makes it against public policy, and nothing of the sort can be discovered.

I ask Senators to read it on page 6 of the majority report. It was, as the Senator from Tennessee well suggests, like the agreements that are entered into in this body over and over again by the representatives of the two parties, perfectly moral, perfectly proper, perfectly judicious, and which are valid because they are subsequently carried into effect by the formal action of the Senate itself. Such action took place in this case, and it was settled that the contest of Morris against Kidd, in the senate, and the contest of Dent against Brohard, in the house, should be postponed and considered on February 6, after the legislature had voted for a Senator.

Mr. President, one was a Republican case and one was a Democratic case, and both these were bona fide contests so far as I know. If either one was a bona fide contest, the other was a bona fide contest. There can be no doubt about that. So the two great political parties in that State, in an agreement which challenges my admiration, arranged that neither of those two contests should be disposed of until after the Senatorial election; and the agreement that was thus made was ratified by the senate and the house, and constitutes, as the Senator from Tennessee has shown us, an irrefragable judgment of the legislature of West Virginia, beyond which we have no right to go.

Almost the whole argument that we ought to go behind that decision of the legislature of West Virginia is based upon the fact that after the Senatorial election the Republicans in the senate concluded, upon an investigation, that Kidd was entitled to his seat and gave it to him, while in the house of representatives, which was Democratic, the Democrats turned out Brohard and gave the seat to Dent. If that proves anything, if there are any presumptions arising, the only presumption is that the Republicans in the senate were fair and that the Democrats in the house were unfair.

There is not anything in the whole record to challenge the good faith of either one of these decisions, so far as I know. If I am wrong, the Senator from Maryland will correct me when he speaks again. If the result of the action of the two bodies of the West Virginia legislature, after a Senator had been elected, had been to seat the Republican in the one house and the Democrat in the other, this case never would have been heard of, Mr. President; but because the Republican senate, after a careful investigation, concluded on the whole that Mr. Kidd was elected to his seat and gave it to him, therefore we have had this controversy, made wrongfully and unjustifiably, as I believe, against the right of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. President, the fourth point that has been made by the respected Senator from Alabama is that there were circumstances of violence in connection with this election which the committee ought to have investigated. The sole evidence on this point is a speech made by the attorney-general of West Virginia when the case of Via was being discussed before a committee.

The Senator from Alabama, I think, did not quite quote the speech correctly. The attorney-general was arguing an election case with some vehemence; the times were quite exciting in Charlestown; there was a great deal of feeling and a great deal of anger on both sides, and there were symptoms that there might be two legislatures. When this Via and Logan case was heard, the report is—I do not know whether it is an accurate statement—that the attorney-general in his speech before the committee charged that the committee had already agreed to decide against Via and in favor of Logan, and said that if they were to carry out this prearranged plan the committee need not be surprised "to see blood flow in the capitol on the next day, because plans had been formulated looking to the preventing of the seating of Logan, even at the cost of shedding of blood."

Mr. President, that one speech did not surround the legislature of West Virginia with any such violence that our committee thought it worth while to consider the question whether the organization of this legislature and this election of a United States Senator were void by reason of violence.

Mr. President, fiery orators are apt to say such things. When the views of eloquent speakers are likely to be met with disfavor they are apt to think that the Republic is numbering its last days, and they seem to hope that their partisans will follow up their fervid arguments and intense utterances by fighting for them. But they do not do so. When the case is over and decided, peace is resumed; and this impolitic and injudicious utterance of this attorney-general, if he made it, was a thing by itself and created no great excitement. It did not even deter the Democratic committee from unseating Via, and yet there was no bloodshed.

Mr. President, the utterance was exactly like the famous speech of Governor Waite, of Colorado, who said that his people would wade into blood up to their horses' bridles if something was not done. I forget what it was; perhaps the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] can tell. Perhaps it was if we did not have the free coinage of silver very soon. I do not suppose because Governor Waite said this that all the proceedings of the Colorado legislature at that time were void, or that therefore, if they had elected the Senator or his colleague at that time as United States Senator, the election of United States Senator would have been illegal.

Mr. President, this last point is hardly worthy of serious discussion; but having been presented by the Senator from Alabama, who is learned and able in his line of writing and discourse, it was due to the Senate that the Senator from Maryland should make the statement which he has made and that the point should be thus briefly discussed by the advocates of the majority report.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, the motion of the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] to send back this subject to the Committee on Privileges and Elections has induced me to make some response to the points urged by the Senator with so much ability and earnestness. The committee, with the exception of the Senator from Alabama, were agreed that this was not a case for investigation by the examination of witnesses; that there was such a paucity of allegation of either intimidation or fraud that no matter was before the committee as an alleged offense to be in that manner investigated.

The Senator from Alabama has likened the inquiry and the finding of the West Virginia legislature to a judgment, a foreign judgment; but the very ground of the inquiry into a foreign judgment, in the case of Ritchie against McMullan, in 159 United States, on page 242, was stated with precision "to warrant the impeaching of a foreign judgment because procured by fraud, fraud must be distinctly alleged and charged."

There was nothing in the case before the committee to be examined except trifles, such as a heated expression of an excited attorney in a committee room, or an idle threat that unless the decision of contests for seats be fair, there might be dual legislatures—utterances of partisans, made in a moment and forgotten, made without responsibility.

When the counsel for the remonstrants in this case were urged by others of the committee and by myself to present a written proffer of the evidence they could produce and were again and again called upon by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], to present in writing their proffer specifiying matters they desired to be investigated tending to show either fraud or intimidation, they were unable to do so. At least they did not specify; they discussed, but never wrote out any offer of testimony; and well they might not, because after a long discussion it was apparent that there was no material testimony to be produced of either fraud or violence, and the committee, with the exception of the Senator from Alabama, agreed there were no matters in this case requiring or justifying any such fruitless waste of time.

And so the case came here to be decided. The committee reported to this House upon the record, which record is in the report. The case of the Senator from West Virginia is one of the simplest that was ever examined in this Chamber.

Some matters which the junior Senator from Alabama has urged would have made no difference in the result, but simply a difference in the majority of the Senator from West Virginia. Had the very agreement which the Senator has here with such vigor discussed never been made, had the vote proceeded without it, the vote for the Senator from West Virginia would have been one more, and the vote of Morris, by the agreement excluded, would have increased his majority by one.

I need not follow the learned and distinguished Senator outside of the record. He has discussed the matters in the pamphlet which I hold in my hand. What is it, Mr. President? It is a brief of the remonstrants, and it contains only print. The Senator from Alabama and myself can not be assured that here are correctly printed even these depositions. The original depositions——

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator excuse me for an interruption?

Mr. McCOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. The depositions themselves were submitted to the committee, not the print to which the Senator refers.

Mr. McCOMAS. The printed copy is all I could procure in the committee room.

Mr. PETTUS. The depositions themselves were there.

Mr. McCOMAS. Well, if they were, they are simply the depositions taken ex parte by Mr. McGraw, of his own motion, selected from people who were his partisans. All of them are ex parte.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McCOMAS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. ALLEN. I inquire if these were depositions taken on notice, or were they mere ex parte affidavits?

Mr. McCOMAS. They were taken at the instance of Mr. McGraw, who was the remonstrant, and taken at his own suggestion, without the presence of the other side, although he had notified Mr. SCOTT to appear. He took these depositions of his adherents in the legislature.

Mr. ALLEN. So that these are practically ex parte affidavits?

Mr. McCOMAS. Ex parte affidavits, without any authority of law; taken upon his own suggestion, and for his own purposes.

Mr. President, such matter is not worthy of consideration in the Senate; but because the distinguished Senator from Alabama, for whom I have very great respect and deference, has given the weight of his name and his recognized high position here to these parts of the brief of counsel, I think it becomes necessary that I should follow his example, should go beyond the record upon which this case is to be determined, and advert to circumstances no better but just as worthy of credit as the brief of the remonstrant, so that the Senate may know that, apart from the record in this case, there was a full answer to these ex parte affidavits, that an investigation of the facts would vindicate the election of the Senator from West Virginia, which the record establishes.

But before doing so, I want to supplement the remarks of the chairman of the committee and of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY], so pertinent, so forcible, by reading an extract from the decision of this Senate in the case of David Turpie, the late distinguished Democratic Senator from Indiana. In that case the Republican remonstrants proffered testimony showing—

That before said alleged election—

That is, the election of the Senator from Indiana—

the senate wrongfully—

That means the State senate of Indiana—

and for the purpose of obtaining a majority for said Turpie in said joint convention declared two members, who had been duly and lawfully elected members thereof, not entitled to their seats, and declared two other persons, who had not been duly and lawfully elected, to be entitled to such seats, and thereupon seated such persons, and that this was done without right, without evidence, and without hearing or debate; and that said persons so seated thereafter were present and voted for Mr. Turpie in said convention, and that without such votes said Turpie would not have received a majority.

Here is the decision of the Senate of the United States in accepting the report and opinion of the committee in the case of Senator David Turpie, a case in which it was said that wrongfully and improperly two men were unseated without hearing, without debate, without the action of the assembly, and two others seated in their places, who voted and made a majority, whereby Mr. Turpie became a Senator; and this Senate voted in accordance with the following statement:

The committee are of opinion that the facts offered, if proved, will not warrant the Senate in declaring the sitting member not entitled to his seat. There can be no doubt that the body in question was the constitutional senate of Indiana. The journals of both houses of the legislature of the State have been submitted to us. It appears that the body was recognized as the senate by the governor and by the house of representatives. Statutes to which its constitutional assent was necessary were enacted and have become part of the law of the State.

It seems to us, therefore, that like decisions by the senate and house of the West Virginia legislature are final; and, as is said in the report of the committee and by the Senator from Tennessee, this is the finding of the body in the State legislature which had the power to find, to deliberate, to decide, and to declare; and that decision is binding upon us. But not only in this Turpie case, which was so well argued by the Senator from Colorado in support of these views, but in other cases the same point has been so decided again and again by this Senate.

In the case of the legislature of West Virginia, it appears, as it did not appear in Indiana, that in each case decided the matter to be decided was submitted, by the senate and the house, to a committee and acted upon by a committee, with how much or how little deliberation the journal can not show.

I grant the time was short; but all the forms to indicate deliberation were observed, and we may presume that the legislators there, as elsewhere, performed their duties. The committee reported back to the senate and to the house these matters, and in each instance there was a majority and minority report; and the assembly in each case, in either branch, voted and decided. That decision is a finality in each case; it is not reviewable by the Senate of the United States. The lawful houses of the general assembly of West Virginia had their power, exercised their authority and their function, and performed their office. It was original, exclusive, and final as to each decision upon the election returns and qualifications of its members.

Now, Mr. President, I call attention to a few facts in this case not in this record, but, I submit with great deference to the distinguished Senator from Alabama, as pertinent, as well founded, as worthy of credence as these other ex parte statements of these various witnesses, whose depositions have been made a part of the brief of the attorneys and now so forcibly argued here in behalf of the remonstrants.

The junior Senator from Alabama has gone outside of the case before the committee and based part of his remarks upon ex parte depositions printed as part of the brief of the remonstrants. This would not be evidence anywhere for any purpose. What I now say is relevant, but also ex parte and not in the record of the case before the Senate; but it is stated upon information quite as credible as that in these printed depositions. It is matter which would appear if the committee had considered those ex parte affidavits.

When the polls closed on election day in November, 1898, and the election officers certified the result to the county courts of the various counties and sent the ballots cast, sealed up, to the clerks of courts of counties in West Virginia, this was the result:

In the senate 17 Republicans and 9 Democrats were elected; in the house of delegates 36 Democrats and 35 Republicans were elected; therefore on joint ballot there was a Republican majority of 7.

If there was a conspiracy, which the junior Senator from Alabama says was engaged in by the Republican governor, secretary of state, attorney-general, and collector of internal revenue, there was a more daring conspiracy on the other side to defeat the election of a Republican Senator by unseating Republicans to obliterate their majority of 7 on joint ballot, and the chief conspirator was the Democratic candidate for United States Senator, who presents these affidavits. These Democrats not only attacked the right of the two sitting senators, Pierce and Getzendanner, to retain their seats. They sought to deprive eight Republican members elected of their seats in the house of delegates, viz: Dunnington, of Lewis County; Brohard, of Taylor County; Via, of Monroe County; Spencer, of Roane County; Cutright, of Upshur County; Scheer, of Preston County; Redmond, of Mason County, and Legge, of Marshall County.

Then it was that the secretary of state and the collector of internal revenue, who were chairman and secretary of the Republican State committee, sent out notices and employed attorneys to defend the seats won by their party at the polls. Then it was that Governor Atkinson telegraphed Mr. Pritchard, an old friend of his who was in a small minority in a large vote, and who it was claimed by his friends had been elected, to file his contest in time and before the last day to save his right and to notify him that he would be saved from the costs and expenses of a contest, if one should be made.

In the case of Via, the circuit court of the State, after a hearing, decided that he was elected from Monroe County. His competitor appealed to the supreme court, but the case was not there heard, and the Democratic house unseated Via and seated Logan, his Democratic competitor. The junior Senator from Alabama gives importance to a heated expression of the attorney-general in an argument before the legislative committee protesting against the theft of Via's seat.

Dunnington had been returned elected by 25 majority in the Fourth delegate district, composed of Webster and Lewis counties. The Democrats secured a recount in Webster County of the votes. The officials were Democrats, and the result was Dunnington was counted out and Talbott, a Democrat, counted in.

In Taylor County, Brohard, Republican, had received 81 majority.

The ballots were not well guarded in the court-house and upon a recount at the instance of Mr. McGraw, in this his own county, in precinct after precinct Republican ballots were found with the name of Brohard erased by the marking of a purple-blue pencil, not such as was used in the election booths of that county on that election day, and it is alleged that in the same handwriting in different precincts in place of the name of Brohard was written the name of his Democratic opponent, Dent. Election officers protest that no such marked ballots and no such ballots in the same handwriting had appeared when they counted and returned them. By these ballots a majority of 22 for Dent, Democrat, was substituted for a majority of 81 for Brohard, Republican.

The case of Brohard I believed, as the Senator from Alabama believed, ceased with the compromise in the legislature; but in the same county the Republican member elect of the county court procured his appeal and obtained his seat, though the case involved the same circumstances as Brohard, who lost his in the legislature. Here is the decision of the supreme court of West Virginia saying that Dent was not, but that Brohard was, entitled to the certificate of election. This was, however, too late to save Brohard.

I do not believe that when the Senator from Alabama made his statement he knew—I did not know until yesterday—that the matter had gone to the supreme court of West Virginia, and that the supreme court of West Virginia, after this contest for Senator, after the legislature had gone by, in due course, came to review this contest proceeding of Brohard and Dent and decided that the member of the returning board, Means, who had issued the certificate to the Republican, Brohard, had done his duty; that he had followed the returns of the canvassing board; that upon the face of those returns, as a member of a canvassing board, he was bound to give the certificate to the man who appeared on the face of the returns to have been elected.

That is most familiar law, but violated in West Virginia until, too late to keep Brohard in his seat, the supreme court reminded Mr. McGraw and his attorneys in this proceeding of this theft of one seat from Taylor County, where the remonstrant lives.

Chief Justice Brannon declared that Brohard was entitled to the certificate and he was entitled to the seat on the certificate issued to him in Taylor County.

Mr. PETTUS. I will ask my friend the Senator from Maryland, if he will allow me——

Mr. McCOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. Has he not got slightly out of the record, and is he not commenting on things we never heard of before?

Mr. McCOMAS. I am going quite out of the record. I am following the same inquiry as my honored friend the Senator from Alabama. I said that I had confined myself yesterday in the statement of this case strictly to the record, but when the able Senator from Alabama went outside of the record to the brief of remonstrant's attorneys, I desire to bring to the notice of the Senate matters outside of this record, relating to the same questions treated in these ex parte depositions, and I believe as well founded as those statements. If I go outside of the record and do not rely upon mere statements of counsel in a brief, I may be pardoned for giving to the Senate a decision of the appellate court of West Virginia upon the very proposition argued by my distinguished friend the Senator from Alabama, and where Chief Justice Brannon declared that Brohard was entitled to his certificate, should have had his certificate, and should have been seated thereon.

It is true I am going outside of the record, but it seems to me the adjudication of the highest court of West Virginia, which declared that Brohard, whose vote was taken from him by the terms of this agreement, was entitled to his seat, the certificate, and his vote until ousted on the merits, should have great weight with the Senate, even though not in this record; much more weight than the matter in the brief of counsel for the remonstrants, which is also not part of the record. I proceed.

I am credibly informed that the grand jury investigated this ballot fraud in Taylor County, and that the sudden death of the officer who was the custodian of the ballots stopped further proceedings.

The junior Senator from Alabama discusses the contest of Morris vs. Kidd for a seat in the senate. I am informed that this contest was bona fide and instituted because out of a total of 6,608 ballots 386 were rejected by election officers in Wood County, and that most of these ballots were rejected for trivial defects, such as the omission of one clerk's name, or for the failure to draw the line on the tickets not voted down the whole length of the ballot. Thus the Democratic officials rejected hundreds of ballots where the intent of the voter was plain. Out of a total of over 14,000 votes, Kidd's majority was only 141; and the contest of Morris was instituted long before the Democrats had deprived elected Republicans of seats in the house. The Republican claim was that when all the proper ballots were counted Kidd was entitled to a majority of 163.

After the election of United States Senator the senate committee went to Wood County, and the result was that upon a recount of the 386 rejected ballots Kidd had a net gain of 70; but the contest proceeded no further, and thereafter Kidd was speedily seated. It appears that the Republican senate's example was not followed by the Democratic house, which unseated Brohard, who was elected.

The agreement I have already stated, and the agreement whereby strife was ended and the election of a United States Senator made peaceably I have already commented upon. I have shown that its immediate result was to give a net advantage of 1 vote to the Democrats by excluding Morris, Republican, from voting for United States Senator.

The record shows that independent of this there was a Republican majority of 2 on joint ballot without any such agreement, so that if all the Republicans voted for the candidate for the Senate, a Republican would be elected. This fact disposes of the argument of the junior Senator from Alabama that Republicans were seeking a fraudulent majority by fraudulent means. Why should they, when they already had a conceded majority of 2 on joint ballot if they could poll all their own for their caucus candidate? And they did poll all but 1, Halptenstal voting for Judge Goff. Still Mr. SCOTT had a majority of 1, and but for this agreement he would have received the vote of Morris, which was cast for him the day before, and he would have had a majority of 2 on joint ballot.

The Senator from Alabama is mistaken in his inadvertent statement in saying two would not have voted for Mr. SCOTT, for all the senators voted for Mr. SCOTT. Whitaker, of the senate, and Asbury, of the house, were both absent on the first day, but both were present in the joint assembly and voted for Mr. SCOTT. This was the reason that the vote on the first day was 46 to 46, as the junior Senator from Alabama states, but the return of Whitaker and Asbury increased the vote of SCOTT to 48, and the Senator from Alabama is thus in error in using the absence of two members as indicating some fraudulent proceeding.

Upon the record it is plain that the election of the junior Senator from West Virginia was peaceful, fair, and is valid.

If we go outside the record with the Senator from Alabama the well-attested facts tend to show that had it not been for a partly successful conspiracy to defeat the results of the elections at the polls by partisan contest, had Brohard, Via, and Dunnington been given the seats to which they were elected, the junior Senator from West Virginia would likely have had a majority of 5 instead of 1 over all.

Whether or not if the contest had been prosecuted to a conclusion Mr. Kidd or Mr. Morris would have been seated I do not know, but it is just to say in the case of Mr. Kidd, whose seat was contested by Morris, after the election of United States Senator the committee in charge of this contest did proceed with the inquiry, and they investigated the vote in one county. In Wood County, as I have said.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McCOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. PETTUS. According to the depositions—that is the only way in which I spoke of it——

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes.

Mr. PETTUS. According to the depositions the votes in that county were there at the beginning. They never did do anything more than to count those votes.

Mr. McCOMAS. In Wood County the senate committee recounted the votes after the senatorial election and Morris gained 70 votes.

Mr. PETTUS. In that county. That is all they ever did, according to the depositions. They reported afterwards.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCOMAS. I will yield for a moment on that point to the senior Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ELKINS. If Senators will look at the report of the committee, page 300, senate journal, 1899, they will find that the vote was recounted in Wood County and Kidd lost 71 votes. I read from the record.

Mr. McCOMAS. In this case one-half of the majority had been wiped out by the proceedings in one county. Whether or not further proceedings could have changed the election result I can not tell, and I do not know, but it does appear on the face of these proceedings that the contest was commenced in good faith, that it was prosecuted with a considerable result, in the wiping out of a majority, except about 71, in a total vote of 14,000 before the contest had proceeded further.

Should we, as now suggested, send this matter back to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, we would have an inconsequent investigation. I have traveled out of the record, as has my honorable and distinguished friend the Senator from Alabama, giving you some of the matter of proof on the other side; but I repeat, as I began, upon the record as the case is made up it is clear and conclusive in favor of the sitting member from West Virginia. The committee, with but one exception, found nothing to investigate.

But I desired the Senate to know that if we should by the mandate of the Senate in voting for this amendment take up this case to investigate irrelevant facts, we would go back to an inquiry which would do no public good, which could not change the result of the election, because it is admitted that, whatever takes place, the legislature was Republican by at least 2 majority; and under the law of this Senate we would again report in favor of the junior Senator from West Virginia. It would make a fruitless inquiry, because it would not change the result of the election.

Therefore I hope the Senate, upon the merits—and I admit in stating them I have gone outside, having followed the example of the able and honored Senator from Alabama in going outside of this record—will vote down the motion. My clear duty here, and that of every other Senator, is to vote on this case upon the record whereon it depends, and upon that record no one can successfully contend that the right of the Senator from West Virginia to his seat is not absolutely plain; that both branches of that assembly were organized; that the governor recognized them; that all the laws of that term hang upon the action of these two lawfully organized houses, all the statutes and all the procedure of government in West Virginia; that no one questions or challenges the validity of these bodies; that they in orderly fashion proceeded to examine and adjudicate these questions.

Having adjudicated them, their finding is unreversable and unreviewable here. And yet had they gone further into the facts I have simply suggested, it might have increased the majority of the Senator from West Virginia. They could in no wise have defeated him or his majority of 1. They might in just fashion, perhaps, have increased his majority to 6; and as all of the committee have decided that vague proffers of testimony which could not help the matter should not be investigated, I with confidence appeal to the Senate to vote down the amendment of the Senator from Alabama and to vote promptly in favor of the resolution of this committee, in which all concur except the honored Senator from Alabama, and vote that the junior Senator from West Virginia is entitled to and should retain his seat for the term of six years from the 4th of March, 1899. I ask for a vote.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, both of the honorable Senators who have argued this question here to-day have talked about going outside of the record, and have seemingly attempted to keep themselves inside of a certain record here which does not appear before the Senate at all. This is a motion now to recommit this case to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as I understand it, for the purpose of bringing up the record; for the purpose of having an investigation upon evidence aliunde, for the purpose of laying before the Senate of the United States the real facts in this case; not those that have been put on to a patched-up record, dressed for the occasion, but those that actually occurred and have passed under examination, upon oath of men who are supposed to be, and I believe are, alleged to be reputable. On a motion of that kind we do not get outside of the record at all by referring to these facts, and I am embarrassed in arguing this question before the Senate because the facts are not here.

Here is a motion in the nature of certiorari to bring up the complete record, and there is nothing now presented to this court, as it is called, to enable us to determine whether or not that writ ought to be allowed and sent down to this committee to bring back the record in full.

Mr. ELKINS. Let me interrupt the Senator from Alabama. What record does the Senator refer to?

Mr. MORGAN. These depositions.

Mr. ELKINS. The depositions?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. ELKINS. There were no depositions taken in this case by authority of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand precisely the technical remark of the Senator from West Virginia. They are depositions sworn to before competent officers.

Mr. ELKINS. I understand the Senator wants these ex parte affidavits.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not sticking in the bark. I am trying to go right to the center of the subject.

Mr. ELKINS. I thought the Senator meant regularly taken depositions.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I do not mean anything except those sworn statements made before competent officers, upon which I dare say an indictment for perjury would lie. Whether it would or not, the moral question is all the same.

Now, sir, we are trying to get at the facts. I am trying to understand, in supporting the motion of my colleague, what the facts were that were aliunde, outside of this record, as it is called. I would be entirely justified in making such a motion upon my meager knowledge of the case, and I intended to make it. I would be justified by the fact that both of the reports here—the report of the majority of the committee and the report of the minority—expressly refer to these facts aliunde and quote them and use them on both sides as evidence material and important in the determination of this question whether or not Mr. SCOTT is entitled to his seat.

Now, when the committee itself goes outside of the record made in the legislature of West Virginia and brings in facts aliunde and makes them a part of the report, both for and against seating Mr. SCOTT, then of course the balance of the Senate wants to know, Are those all the facts that bear upon the question? You open the door; you go and make inquiry outside the record, and you propose to stop it just at convenience. We say "No; inasmuch as you are here before an appellate court, or rather a superior court, bring up your case for trial."

It never was intended, sir, to try this case in the committee. The Senate of the United States is the trial court here, the tribunal to determine this question; but the committee have usurped to themselves the right, after quoting a part of the facts aliunde, to leave the balance of them without being in reach of the Senate, unadmitted in evidence, unprinted, incapable of identification.

So, if I were trying to justify my vote in this case before my constituents and felt that it was my duty to resort to these depositions for that purpose, I could not do it; and yet I am one of the judges put here for the purpose of trying this case. I have to render a verdict upon a partial statement, not upon the whole record. I have to render a verdict upon those parts of the case which the Senators who make these respective reports see proper to select, and not upon the whole case; and that is not right.

This committee ought to be required, and every committee of this body ought to be required, to bring before this tribunal the evidence offered in committee, whether it is rejected or whether it is received, for they are not the judges whether it is right to reject it or to receive it. They are the judges of their own opinions and their belief about it, but they are not the final judges of the question, and therefore we are entitled to all of this testimony.

Mr. President, this is a very important matter. It will not do for the Senate of the United States to go before the people of this country as smothering inquiry into the facts which surround this transaction. That is their attitude here to-day. The majority of the committee put us in the attitude of smothering inquiry, cutting us off upon a question of law, upon a question that it is their opinion that at least not all but a part of the evidence aliunde is inadmissible. A part they say is admissible, but the balance of it not. We are unable to discriminate between the parts that are omitted from this report and the parts that are included and made the subject-matter of discussion and judgment also. Now, it will not do for the Senate of the United States to go before the country with any such record as that. We will be accused, and justly, too, of smothering the facts in this case for the convenience either of ourselves or of somebody else. I do not want the Senate put in any such shape as that.

Sir, this country is very rife and anxious, on the tiptoe of anxiety and expectation both, in regard to changing the organic, fundamental law of the United States in respect of the choice of Senators. It is objected all over the country that Senators ought to be chosen in all of the different States by direct vote of the people, and that proposition has passed the House and been sent to the Senate and is now before the committee. It is here by a vote of nearly all of the vast body of legislators in the other end of the Capitol, nearly the whole body voting that we ought to unite with them in carrying a two-thirds vote in this body, so as to submit to the different legislatures of the United States the direct question whether or not Senators are to be chosen by the people.

There never was a graver proposition presented to any body than that. It enters into the very organism of the Government. It ought not to be attended with any sort of feeling or any sort of excitement that would cause the people to come to a hasty or inconsiderate or incorrect conclusion. I repeat, Mr. President, there never was a more solemn, serious, dangerous question presented to this body than that. Without going into the argument of it at all or suggesting the various directions in which this question is solemn, serious, and dangerous, I will just cite one, if you please. It is applicable to my own State, and I have a right to make it.

Until the suffrage question in the South is put upon a permanent basis we had as well cut our own throats as to carry the question of the election of Senators by the people before the body of electors in the South. We had as well burn our houses and destroy our farms and run out of the country. We have never yet encountered any trouble or danger or irritation equal to those that would instantly arise whenever, in the State of Alabama, for instance, or in any of the other Southern States, a Senator of the United States was to be chosen by direct vote of the people. Until that question is settled in some form or other consentively by the people of the United States, and permanently, so long as I have the honor to remain on this floor I will resist any change in the organic law. I am bound to do it to save the rights of my people.

Now, Mr. President, how much weight are we adding to the argument in those States that are not troubled with these difficulties which my State has? When the people are heard to say, as they will say, the Senate of the United States judged of an election in West Virginia by the legislature, and in order to keep the facts from the country and in order to prevent a decision of this case upon its honest, actual merits, in order to shelter themselves under and escape into pure, cold technicalities, have suppressed depositions taken, if not according to law, after the forms of law, depositions of many men following up a report, a signed report of more than a majority of both houses of the legislature of West Virginia, that the particular election in hand was a fraud upon the State and the people, the Senate of the United States refuses a motion to bring up the record and insists upon deciding this case upon a narrow, cold technicality.

We can not, sir, afford to assume such an attitude toward this great question at this time. We had better hesitate about this matter. We had better send this case back to that committee and ask them to send up all the record here, so that the Senate can determine upon an examination of it whether it is relevant or irrelevant. We had better not force matters to a conclusion here to-day upon this proposition pending a motion to bring up all of this evidence from the committee. It is a very dangerous thing to do, Mr. President.

Now, looking at this case upon the face of it I know nothing else about it except what is presented here in these two reports. It appears to me that it is easy enough to make a statement of it that is undeniable. I will make a statement of what I conceive to be the case on one point, and that a vital point in the case; it certainly is a vital point.

Kidd was seated and sworn in the senate, Morris was put in his place and was seated and sworn, and both were prohibited from speaking or voting in the senate, for a time. This was done to enable SCOTT to carry the election for Senator, in pursuance of an agreement to that effect entered upon between five Democrats of the House and five Republicans of the Senate, which agreement was made to prevent civil commotions.

Now, sir, if that is a true statement of the facts, there is a legislative body which has been coerced. They have been coerced by apprehensions excited by a very heated wrangle, I may call it, a controversy which existed over there and at which Mr. SCOTT was present and knew all about it. That controversy involved the question of the organization of a separate legislature, the drawing out of certain members from the different houses, going off and organizing another body so that they would have had two legislatures, or bodies claiming to be such, in West Virginia.

Well, a more unfortunate situation can hardly be imagined in a State than one of these double-headed legislative establishments. There is hardly anything worse than that. If we pass by our vote to-day solemnly the declaration that that can be lawfully done by making the record to speak what it was not intended to speak and what was not the truth of the situation, we simply encourage and put ourselves on record as furnishing opportunity to such expedients as this whenever the heat of partisan politics may require it and seem to justify it. We can not afford, Mr. President, to make a record of that sort here. I have never yet heard of a judgment rendered by mortal man, unless it was by some supreme autocrat, an emperor, which could not be assailed for fraud.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator pardon a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. He is usually very clear in his statements. I should like him to be specific as to whether he holds that the report and the decision in the Turpie case were erroneous or not, because there the attempt was to assail the decision of the Indiana legislature in two cases for fraud.

Mr. MORGAN. I have not looked at that case lately, but as the Senator puts his question to me, I feel an old impression creeping over me that I did not think it was right.

Mr. ELKINS. But you voted for it.

Mr. MORGAN. Nothing is right in the sight of the American people or the Senate of the United States which forms a technicality to hold the truth in chains. Nothing is right which foists a falsehood upon the Senate. Although it may be done under the strictest formalities of a record and under seal, it is not right. The Senate ought always to feel that it has the power to break away from the false device and fasten its judgment upon the solid foundation of truth. It ought always to feel that way.

Now, here was a situation in West Virginia that was anxious, aggravated do doubt by a great deal of controversy and perhaps quarrel and friction, and it got hold of the popular mind in such a form there as to produce very great alarm. The quotations in this report show that there was a state of profound alarm there in regard to the State organism, the government itself. Both parties were involved in it. The Democrats were turning out Republicans from the house; the Republicans were turning Democrats out of the senate. Nobody knew where it was going to end. There were declarations made that blood would flow in the streets of Charleston unless that thing would stop. I do not know who was going to shed it or who ought to have shed it; under the circumstances it does not make much difference.

That was the situation, and it was a very trying one, and a very dangerous one, too. There was a means thought of to compose that situation, and that means was by an indirect and false judgment upon the records of the two houses. Now, what was that judgment? It was that out of each house a member should be removed and another put in his place, and both should be prohibited from voting for the present. It was the intention of everybody, and everybody knew exactly what it was, that these were not honest challenges of votes; that they were not sincere; that they were not intended to be carried into execution; but the judgment was made up that way. The record spoke as if it was an honest contest and that those men were actually ousted from their seats by a vote of the senate and a vote of the house, when that was not the fact.

How did they bring it about? Five members, five Democrats in the house and five Republicans in the senate, made a written agreement that these contests should be postponed until after the election of a Senator, and that such and such men should vote and such and such men should not vote. In other words, it was firmly agreed that the weight of the political parties should be so adjusted on that occasion as that Mr. SCOTT would be certain to be elected, and as soon as that election was over the gag was to be removed and these men were to have the rights that belonged to them under the constitution of West Virginia and under the oaths that they had taken to represent those people. Here, then, was a suspension of the functions of government by that legislature making a false record by an agreement entered into between ten men.

But I am answered that the record was made; what right have you to say it was a false record? I say it, Mr. President, because not intended to be true; it was not intended to remain; it was not a record of what the legislature actually did or intended to do. It was a false statement of a proposition made as a makeshift to get over a difficulty that seemed at the time to be insuperable under other conditions; that was all.

Now, we have had an investigation here and a report has been made to the Senate informally. It has not yet been printed, I believe, in full. It has cost, as was remarked on the floor to-day, thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands, of dollars, great public scandals and anxiety, and all that. Character has been handled about here without the slightest deference or pity, or mercy, or anything of that sort, pro and con, and the effort of the Senate has been to find out whether the legislature of Montana was corrupted. I do not know whether the report shows that it was or was not; I do not know whether the report shows that some individual was concerned in corrupting it or not, for I have not read it; I do not know. But I know that those are the issues presented in that case.

Here is the action of that legislature called in question. It does not make any difference about the action of the parties concerned. They might have done what they pleased and behaved never, never so badly, and yet, unless that bad action, that evil influence, is traced to and located in the judgment of the legislature of Montana so as to produce a corrupt result, of course no harm has been done to the State or the country, no matter how much its manners or its morals or its sensibilities may be wounded.

Here is the very same question presented, but in a different form. Instead of its coming here now in the form of seduction of bribery and money, it comes in the form of threat and force. Well, poor humanity is amenable to all of these things more or less; and we may sooner expect to see a community in its anxieties give way to the supremacy of a political party or its managers on account of force or the threat of force or of disasters which might be fatal or might greatly hurt the people than to see them give way to the acceptance of bribes.

But, Mr. President, the question is exactly the same in both cases. Did the legislature of Montana act contrary to the Constitution and the laws of the United States and the public policy of the people of the United States in electing a man under the influence of alleged bribery and corruption? There is the record all straight. But we go now into the character of the action itself, and whether we trace it directly or only inferentially or perhaps in a very remote way to the man who is alleged to have got the benefit of it and the certificate of election in Montana, yet there was a legislature corrupted by the use of money, performing an official act under the influence of that corruption which we set aside because it is fraudulent and wrong in every moral sense.

That is the whole story in the Montana case. What is the difference between that and the case in West Virginia except that money was not used in the latter, but artifice, influence, chicanery, all manner of bargaining, threats? All these things were used. The record shows it. Enough appears on the record here now to show it My colleague, in the mere analysis of the agreement itself, proved that there could be nothing else true of the whole business except that the legislature of West Virginia had yielded to a condition of affairs induced there by the ruling and leading politicians, which threatened the peace of that sovereign State.

Now then, can we not go into that record for the purpose of finding out whether that judgment spoke the truth, or whether it was influenced by these outside facts, some of which appear in the reports, and others of which are held back and not shown to us at all?

Mr. President, we can not afford to shut our eyes to this condition. The Senate can a great deal better wait for a few days and have this committee bring up the evidence here than it can afford now to shut the door of inquiry and say, we stand upon the record, when that record is challenged here solemnly, for fraud and wrong, in the Senate of the United States by the report of the minority, and also by an argument which seems to be justly based upon the facts presented on the face of the record.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Now, Mr. President, the majority in their report were accurate in their statement. The case was submitted upon the memorials, the journals of the two houses, and agreed statement of facts, which included this signed agreement which the Senator from Alabama has just discussed, and upon certain concessions of counsel at the hearing. Upon that the committee proceeded.

But before they proceeded the memorialists and their counsel were requested to make specific proffer of either fraud or intimidation in respect of any step in this election of a Senator by the joint assembly. This was never given, and the only matters which were suggested by counsel, who seemed powerless even to make a proffer of evidence, are the vague statements in these rambling ex parte depositions.

It must be said that the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is quite wise when he says that he has simply skimmed over the face of the matter, because with his habit of thought, if he had searched these depositions and then found that the persons failed to make a proffer of the fraud or intimidation, he would say it would have been unworthy of the Senate that this committee should have wasted public time without some more significant evidence.

The only surprise and the only qualification I make is that if the able and distinguished colleague of the Senator from Alabama had not differed from the rest of the committee, I should have felt that he on this matter would have said it would have been a waste of public time to investigate such vague statements.

It will not do to call these ex parte depositions taken by Mr. McGraw parts of this record. It required the great ability and the earnestness of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] to make these matters appear serious.

He is sincere about them; he is earnest about them; but when we look over these affidavits again and find how little there is, my great puzzle is that the honored Senator from Alabama—the colleague of the Senator who last addressed the Senate—should have given so much importance to them; and I am confirmed in my impression when I find that seven Senators on the committee concur with me in that judgment. That we did investigate fully, thoroughly, leaving nothing uninquired into which was worthy to investigate, and having done so, upon the undisputed facts, we found the resolution in favor of the election of the junior Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. MORGAN. The Committee on Privileges and Elections, like every other committee of the Senate, is not a judicial body. It does not pass any final judgment at all. It is the report of an investigation, and they have not any right to pass any final judgment except to express their opinions; and we are very gratified that they are usually so able and so well grounded. This is like a case sent by a chancellor down to a master to investigate the facts and make a report and proof. That master does not undertake to say to the chancellor, "I would not send up certain proof here before your honor for the reason that I had the right to decide this case myself, and my judgment is that that evidence which was offered by this plaintiff in the case down here was very improper, very irrelevant, and therefore I would not send it up."

Now, that party had the right to have all that evidence brought up to the court. This is the court. This court has not heard any of those depositions. This court does not know whether that is shown in those papers. The committee have cut them off, and insist peremptorily that their judgment upon that proposition shall be final and conclusive, conclusive against this court and conclusive against the party. That is the situation exactly. How can we do that?

The Senator evidently finds a very strong analogy between this and a trial of a cause in a court. He does not choose a certain bill of exceptions which contains a certain statement of fact because it is entirely irrelevant in his judgment or it might not have been offered in due form or there might have been a stipulation of counsel. Now, Mr. President, I want to object right here to the counsel before the Committee on Privileges and Elections or any other committee in this body having the right by a stipulation to cut the Senate off from an investigation of the facts in the case. We have got no counsel here that I know anything about. We have got no licensed and authorized advisers of our committees, authorized by law to go there and pronounce opinions like a judge-advocate in a court-martial. We have not anything like that. When counsel are admitted, they are all mere representatives, the mouthpieces of the parties who choose to employ them, and they get the permission of the committee to go there. But, sir, they have not any right to undertake by a stipulation to put certain facts in the case or keep certain facts out of the case, where those facts are questioned or where the absence of those facts is thought to be a matter of some importance by those concerned in the case. And I object to that.

I noticed that part of the report about the stipulations of counsel; I heard the remarks of the honorable Senator from Maryland upon them. They would have been very apt, indeed, in a court of nisi prius, perhaps, or in an appellate court; but this is a court, Mr. President, of first instance; this is a court which tries this case from the bottom up. We have got a right to have every fact that any Senator thinks is material to this case that was offered to the committee or was in the reach of that committee, or which may be brought before this body for consideration. That is all I have got to say about it.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Now, Mr. President, if there be no further remarks, I ask for a vote upon the amendment and the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HANSBROUGH in the chair). The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. ALLEN. Let it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Alabama is to recommit the resolution to the committee with instructions, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the resolution and report be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with instructions to investigate the case fully by all such legal evidence as may be presented to them.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a word. I would not be willing by any vote of mine to appear to be put in the position of closing the door to any proper investigation, and therefore I want to state the reason which will influence me in my vote.

I understand the proposition of the majority of the committee, as stated by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], to be this: That if all the charges with reference to the various individual legislators in the legislature of West Virginia are true, the committee enters a demurrer that, if true, they are not matters which can affect the judgment of the Senate, for the reason that they are matters within the control of the West Virginia legislature; not matters to be determined by the Senate. I ask the Senator from Tennessee if I am correct in that statement?

Mr. TURLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. MCCOMAS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Maryland will answer, it will be satisfactory.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia so understood me, then I did not understand myself. I do not think that what he says is accurate or correct. We heard every bit of matter that appeared to be appropriate. We simply held that as to the senate and house of delegates of West Virginia, they having jurisdiction in respect to the election of their own members, their final action was conclusive and not reviewable by this Senate; and in respect of vague suggestions of wrongdoing by A or B, we asked that counsel should proffer something which would be proved by somebody, and counsel failed to make any proffer of any evidence they might offer to sustain this statement; and when they were not clear, distinct, and specific, when they declined to make any proffer whatever, the committee, with almost unanimity, said there was nothing to investigate in respect to those matters.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, I possibly understood the Senator from Maryland better than he understood me. It may be that I was not felicitous in my expression. Of course I understood that there were other matters than the simple one involved in the question relating to the exclusive jurisdiction of the legislature of West Virginia.

Mr. MCCOMAS. For instance, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will pardon me for a moment in order that I may complete my statement.

I understood from the Senator from Maryland, both in his argument and in his now repeated statement, that there were matters which the committee did not deem to be proper that the Senate should go into, which related to questions within the exclusive jurisdiction of the legislature of West Virginia; and that, therefore, they did not go further into those investigations, because such investigations would be profitless. If they were matters within the exclusive jurisdiction of the legislature of West Virginia, for instance, the question as to whether or not a legislator who had accepted a commission in the Army—that question having been passed upon by the legislature of West Virginia—I understood the committee to take the position that that was a question which could not now be again passed upon by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. MCCOMAS. That is true.

Mr. BACON. I use that simply by way of illustration. The same principle, as I understand, was applied to all other questions which were raised as to the competency of a legislator to vote where that question had been passed upon by the legislature of West Virgina. If I am correct in my understanding of the Senator's statement in that regard, I am very free to say as a proposition of law I believe it to be sound.

I only rose for the purpose of freeing myself from the slightest possible imputation of any design or wish to shut off any proper investigation. In other words, according to the report made by the committee, as I have read it, I understand the proposition to be one of sound law—that these matters having been so decided, further investigation can not possibly be justified.

I only make this statement because I believe in the utmost latitude of investigation. It is my understanding that the legal propositions involved have been stated by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], and so I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, there should not be any mistake in the minds of Senators about what took place before the committee. The counsel were notified to be present. The chairman stated:

The committee is now ready to proceed. There are sundry papers before the committee which I will read. On the 14th of December both sides entered into the following agreement.

That agreement was stated. Everything that was before the committee was stated in the presence of the counsel before they began their argument. This statement was then made:

The committee has not taken any action whatever in the face of these various papers. The object to-day is to hear freely argued the merits of the respective sides, and if after such argument the committee deem it necessary to justice and a proper investigation to take testimony, it will so decide.

A further statement was made to counsel——

Mr. ALLEN. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not until I read this sentence, and then I will yield to the Senator.

The chairman then stated:

Then, in arguing in an informal way the merits of this case (we will hear both sides on the merits of the case), you may state what testimony you think should be brought before the committee in addition to what is now before us.

Full argument was made on those conditions; and after argument had been fully heard and the counsel had stated everything which they knew or imagined by any possibility could be proven to the committee, the committee concluded to make no further investigation, but to decide the case, as they have decided it, with one dissenting voice, upon the testimony which was then before the committee.

Now, I should be glad to answer any question the Senator from Nebraska may wish to put.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to submit an observation in my own time.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the Senator does not wish to ask me any question?

Mr. ALLEN. When the Senator is through.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thought the Senator wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. ALLEN. I have changed my mind.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a judicious mind that the Senator employs.

Mr. ALLEN. The question which I desired to put to the Senator from New Hampshire—I was satisfied he was well prepared to answer it—was this: Is it conceded that the legislature from which the sitting member received a certificate was the de jure legislature of that State? Is that a conceded fact?

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no dispute about that.

Mr. ALLEN. If there is no dispute about that, then that ought to settle the question, Mr. President. There ought to be no running off into the brush and talking about affidavits and small technicalities and irregularities, because if that was the de jure legislature or even the de facto legislature of that State; if it was not a revolutionary body or an illegal body, then whatever that organization did in respect of the election of a Senator of the United States is conclusive upon this body, and I do not see how there can be any dispute about it.

Of course, Mr. President, the line of demarcation ought to be plain, and I think it is plain. If the de jure legislature had been overthrown, entirely driven out, for instance, at the point of the bayonet, or by violence, or completely overcome by fraud and destroyed, and a revolutionary body had been instituted in its place, which had elected a person who came here bearing the certificate of the governor, I think clearly the Senate of the United States would have the power to, and ought to, inquire into and to determine that question. But when his title comes through the de jure legislature, however irregular its proceeding may have been, and the governor certifies to his election, that question is solely within the jurisdiction of the State, and concludes the Senate of the United States.

The question of the right of the Senate to pass upon the election and qualifications of a Senator does not carry with it the right to go into all the minor details of regularity or irregularity. The qualifications which a Senator must have to permit him to occupy a seat in this body are the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution, and no others. All other qualifications—whether he has the ability, whether he has the character or the standing to represent a particular State in the Senate of the United States—are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the legislature of that State: but that he must have the requisite age, that he must have the other constitutional requirements, is within the jurisdiction of the Senate of the United States; and I have assumed all the way through, and I am going to vote upon that supposition, that the occupant of the seat from West Virginia comes here by virtue of the election of the de jure legislature of that State, properly certified by the governor.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this case is on all fours with the case that was decided in 1888 from Indiana. There is scarcely any difference in the legal status of the two cases. In this case the senate of West Virginia was Republican, and in the Indiana case it was Democratic. The house in the Indiana case was Republican and in the West Virginia case it was Democratic. Each house did practically what has been done in this case. The Democratic senate removed a Republican and put a Democrat in his place, and the Republican house removed a Democratic member and put a Republican in his place.

The Senate committee then held, and the Senate indorsed it, that the position taken just a moment ago by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] was the correct one. There was a legislature of the State of Indiana and there was a controversy in respect to the speakership of one of the bodies. That, however, clearly did not affect the contest. It was held then by the Senate that there had been a valid election. It was so held, as I understand, upon the ground that it was not a de facto but a de jure legislature; that it was a legal legislature when it convened. Both bodies exercised the constitutional right to determine who were members. It was claimed that the members of each body in exercising that right had gone beyond what they should have done. It was then decided, I think by a very large majority, that that was not a matter for the investigation of the Senate of the United States.

Of course, Mr. President, I distinguish between a case of that kind and the one which has been suggested here of revolution. There may be a case, as the committee have said, where it would be very proper for us to go into an examination, but that would be done on the theory, as I understand it, that there was really not any legislature at all. A regular legal, constitutional legislative body can not destroy—at least we can not assume that it can not destroy—its character by the exercise, even if it makes a mistake, of a function that can not be questioned which is submitted to it by the constitution of the State and by the general law governing legislative bodies in this country; nor, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] suggested to me, by bad behavior.

The legislature may do what we condemn, what we think is not good administration; but at the same time that does not justify this Senate in assuming the functions that the constitution of West Virginia or the constitution of any other State has left with the legislative body of the State.

I do not see, Mr. President, if all that has been said here by the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] were true, how we can resolve ourselves into a body to determine what has been determined by the house and the senate of West Virginia, upon the theory that they were mistaken in their finding, or that they were not fair in their finding. So long as the conditions existing there left a legal legislative body capable of electing a Senator, and, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] suggests, having jurisdiction to decide all these controversies—and they have decided them—there is no provision made anywhere for an appeal from that finding, whether it was right or not.

It seems to me that this case has been determined not only by the decision in the Turpie case and by the decisions in several other cases, but it must be determined upon the general principle that we are not authorized by the Constitution to make this inquiry. Therefore, if this resolution should be sent back to the committee, it seems to me that we would not be justified in subpœnaing witnesses and going into a further examination of this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I hope it will not be insisted on that the vote shall be taken to-night. There are other Senators who desire to discuss the question.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that the hour is early and the Senate is quite full. Senators are here. We ought to have a vote this evening; it seems to me, and I trust the Senator will not object.

Mr. PETTUS. Is it your purpose to cut off further debate?

Mr. MCCOMAS. Of course not. If the Senator from Alabama desires further debate on his part, I do not ask for a vote.

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly I expect to reply to some of the things which have been said about this case.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I had hoped that we might get a vote this evening.

Mr. PETTUS. I did not suppose you would try this case just like you would an action——

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Alabama wants to debate the question further and is not ready to go on now, although it is not late in the afternoon, we can let this subject go over until to-morrow and do some other business.

Mr. LODGE. There is a bill assigned for to-morrow.

Mr. CHANDLER. Perhaps we might agree upon some time to-morrow when we may take the vote. I ask that the vote may be taken on this resolution to-morrow at 3 o'clock.

Mr. PETTUS. I will object to that. Why this indecent haste about this case?

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator name a time when he thinks we can agree to vote upon this case?

Mr. PETTUS. No; I will not, because I do not know what Senators desire to speak.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator objects, does he?

Mr. PETTUS. I do.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that it is unusual, not to say extraordinary, to refuse to extend the usual courtesy to the Senator from Alabama, who has made a request. It seems to me there ought to be no conditions about it.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Arkansas will allow me, in the first place, I extended the courtesy; secondly, I made no condition; and thirdly, I asked unanimous consent, when the Senator from Alabama said it was indecent haste to ask for unanimous consent. The Senator from Arkansas knows very well that it is not.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator from New Hampshire has agreed that the case may go over on the request of the Senator from Alabama, of course that settles it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the case going over until to-morrow? The Chair hears none, and it is not now before the Senate.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Senate to now proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3419, known as the Alaskan bill.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me that I may ask to have a bill taken up that will not lead to any debate? It can not possibly do so, I think.

Mr. CARTER. When the Alaskan bill shall have been taken up, I will yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the request of the Senator from Montana that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is known as the Alaskan bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. CLAY. I ask the Senator from Montana to now yield to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator.

BRIDGES OVER OCMULGEE AND OCONEE RIVERS.

Mr. CLAY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10097.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 10097) to authorize the Atlantic and Gulf Short Line Railroad Company to build, construct, and maintain railway bridges across the Ocmulgee and Oconee rivers within the boundary lines of Irwin, Wilcox, Telfair, and Montgomery counties, in the State of Georgia; and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] has kindly yielded to me that I may change a notice heretofore given. I gave notice yesterday that I should ask the Senate to consider the Army appropriation bill to-morrow; but I have been so urged to put off its consideration that I have yielded, and now give notice that I shall call up the bill on Monday next.

FESTUS DICKINSON.

Mr. BATE. I ask permission of the Senator from Montana to call up House bill 2331. I am sure there will be no debate about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield for the purpose of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 2331) granting an increase of pension to Festus Dickinson; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Festus Dickinson, late captain's clerk, United States Navy, war with Mexico, and to pay him a pension of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLOUR INSPECTION IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. KENNEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4048. It is a very short bill, and is to correct an obvious oversight in the act for the inspection of flour in the District of Columbia, which was approved December 21, 1898.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 4048) to amend an act regulating the inspection of flour in the District of Columbia, approved December 21, 1898; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to strike out the last clause of section 6 of the act entitled "An act regulating the inspection of flour in the District of Columbia," approved December 21, 1898, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And no barrel, half barrel, or sack of flour not examined and branded by the inspector as aforesaid shall be sold within the District under fine of $1 for each and every barrel, half barrel, or sack, to be collected as other fines and penalties are collected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OGDEN, UTAH.

Mr. RAWLINS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4206) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Ogden, in the State of Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CARTER. The Senator was so kind on yesterday afternoon that I feel constrained to yield to him now, with the notice that I hope it will terminate the requests for unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the United States court, post office, and other offices in the city of Ogden, in the State of Utah, at a cost of not exceeding $250,000.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 2, line 13, after the word "thereof," to strike out:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause appropriate sketches, plans, drawings, and specifications and detailed estimates for the building to be prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I find that certain Senators who desire to address the Senate briefly with reference to the pending amendment to the Alaska bill are not prepared to proceed at this time.

Mr. RAWLINS. I desire to submit a few remarks on that question, if I am in order.

Mr. CARTER. Then my observations are not in order.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RAWLINS. I yield.

HOT SPRINGS MOUNTAIN RESERVATION.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 982) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to examine certain claims of persons who owned or occupied buildings on the Hot Springs Mountain Reservation, which had been condemned by the Hot Springs commission and afterwards burned, and to fix a reasonable value thereof, and making appropriation for the payment of said claims.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, section 2, line 19, after the word "administrators," to strike out "or assigns;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That a sum of money sufficient to pay for such investigation and the claims so ascertained and fixed by the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to such person or persons, claimants, their executors, administrators, the sum or sums of money equal to the values so as aforesaid found by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WELLS C. M'COOL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2788) for the relief of Wells C. McCool.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $542.50, the amount of the pay and allowances of Wells C. McCool as first lieutenant of Company I, Twenty ninth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, from December 1, 1862, to April 30, 1893, less any amount McCool may have received for pay or allowances for such period, to be paid by the proper officers of the United States to Wells C. McCool, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assignees.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to state that several Senators who desire to speak upon the Alaska bill not being present at the moment when the bill was taken up, I will consent that the matter may go over until to-morrow. I wish at this time to have read to the Senate for its information certain resolutions passed by the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Seattle, which very forcefully set forth the necessity for very prompt action upon the Alaska bill.

In connection with this statement which will be read, I desire to advise Senators who may have any interest whatever in any pending amendment or prospective amendment that it is the earnest desire of all, I believe, finally to dispose of this bill in the Senate to-morrow; and immediately on the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow I now give notice that I will ask unanimous consent to have the bill taken up and to continue its consideration until a vote can be reached upon the bill and amendments, which I hope will be accomplished to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want the Senator to understand that we agree to vote to-morrow. I do not know what the debate may be. There are objectionable features proposed in this bill, and we reserve the right to continue the debate.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator's observation would apply to a request for unanimous consent, which was not preferred nor intended to be preferred, and is therefore inapplicable to the remarks I made.

Mr. TELLER. I have no desire to retard the passage of this bill beyond what is fair to get a proper bill. That is all.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is it the Senator from Montana asks now?

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the communication from the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Seattle may be read for the information of the Senate, whereupon I contemplate withdrawing the bill for the evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the chairmen and members of the Committees on Territories in the Senate and House of Representatives.

GENTLEMEN: It having come to the knowledge of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce that the so-called "Alaska civil code bill" may fail of passage because of the many other important measures to be considered, we would most respectfully and earnestly renew our appeal for the early passage of this bill. Each day but furnishes additional reasons why more courts and a code of civil procedure should be given that Territory at once. The property interests on the Yukon and Bering Sea, already very large, will be increased many millions within the next few months. Mining property and ships and shipping interests aggregating more than a million dollars in value are now in dispute, and under the present law the one court provided for the Territory can not hear these cases, and while the people of Alaska warmly welcome the soldiers being sent to them, they feel that it is not only foreign to the American policy, but equally unfair to the Army and to the citizen, to compel the former to act in a judicial capacity and settle property interests and titles to mining claims, as they will practically be compelled to do should the proposed legislation fail to become a law.

Recognizing the demands made upon your time by the needs of the newly acquired islands, we still assure you that their necessities are not greater than those of the people of Alaska. While there should be at least three courts now open for business in that Territory, the fact remains that there is not one. The late judge of that district having resigned and his resignation having been accepted by the President, to take effect on the 1st day of April, and his successor having not yet reached the Territory, there is to-day no means of enforcing a civil right in Alaska. And even upon the arrival of the recently appointed judge but little or no relief can be given the residents of the Yukon Valley and vicinity. We would therefore most earnestly urge upon you the necessity of the passage of the pending measure; and this should be at the earliest possible moment, to the end that the officers provided for may reach their respective posts with the great crowds now preparing to go to that country.

JOHN P. HOYT,
JOHN L. NEAGLE,
J. A. MOORE.

The foregoing was prepared by a committee of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, and at a regular meeting of the body April 18, 1900, was approved and ordered sent to both Houses of Congress.

[SEAL.] THOS. W. PROSCH,
Secretary.

Mr. BATE. From whom is the communication?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the Chamber of Commerce of Seattle.

Mr. BATE. Seattle, Wash., and not Alaska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seattle, Wash.

WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE.

Mr. TURLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4129) to detach the county of Dyer from the eastern division of the western district of Tennessee and to attach the same to the western division of the western district of said State of Tennessee.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect thirty days after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GREER COUNTY, TEX.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2582) to provide for the establishment of the intersection of the true one hundredth meridian with Red River, to ascertain the amount of taxes collected by the State of Texas in what was formerly known as Greer County and the expenditures made on account of said county by said State, and for other purposes. It has been favorably reported by the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in section 4, page 6, line 17, after the word "one," to insert:

And may receive and consider any testimony which he may consider to be pertinent to the subject of such inquiry.

So as to read:

He may also receive and consider any testimony taken by either party in said cause entitled The United States against The State of Texas, in the Supreme Court of the United States, reported in 162 United States, page 1, and may receive and consider any testimony which he may consider to be pertinent to the subject of such inquiry.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I and perhaps some others would be very much obliged to the Senator from Texas if he would give us some little explanation concerning what this measure is. We do not comprehend what it is.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will be very glad to do so.

I will state briefly that for many years there was a controversy between the State of Texas and the United States as to the ownership of what is known as Greer County, a county embracing about 1,500,000 acres of land on the eastern border of our State and now in the Territory of Oklahoma. The case was finally determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, in 1896, against the claim of the State of Texas, and in the opinion of the court, delivered by Mr. Justice Harlan, it is said that what claim the State had upon the United States for maintaining law and order in that county from 1860, when it was created into a county, down to 1896, when the decision was rendered, was a proper subject for the consideration of Congress.

While the duty was devolved upon the State of Texas to maintain law and order in that county, and courts were organized there, schoolhouses built, and a system of public education was instituted by the State of Texas, the courts of the United States, following the political department of the Government of the United States as to the claim of ownership, enjoined the collection of taxes in that county by the State of Texas; and consequently the State, while exercising the powers of a de facto government in the county, was compelled to pay out of its treasury the salaries of the judges, all the fees of office for executing the criminal laws in that county, and for maintaining a system of education in the county, without any return in taxation except small amounts voluntarily paid.

The object of this bill—not to take too much of the time of the Senate—is to have the Secretary of the Interior inquire into and ascertain certain facts, so that hereafter the Congress may consider and pass upon the question whether or not, under all the circumstances, the United States, in accounting with the State of Texas, should pay that State anything in the premises. The bill does not commit Congress to the payment of any money at all except $7,500 to make this inquiry, nor does it commit Congress to any declaration that the State of Texas is entitled to any sum of money from the United States.

The bill proposes to ascertain these facts by a commissioner, rather than impose this onerous duty upon any committee of Congress; and after full consideration by the Committee on the Judiciary the bill was reported favorably by the unanimous vote of that committee.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will inquire whether this lays the foundation for a claim by the State of Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly. It is to ascertain the facts in the case, so that Congress may consider the question and determine for itself——

Mr. HAWLEY. The question of refunding these expenditures by Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. From 1860 up?

Mr. CULBERSON. Really from 1886, when the county was organized. It was created as a county in 1860, but it was not organized as a county until 1886, so that it actually covers about ten years.

I will state to the Senator from Connecticut that the bill, if passed, does not commit Congress to anything. It simply provides a method of gathering and ascertaining the information which it is necessary for Congress to have in order to pass intelligently upon the proposition.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator from Texas if this opens the controversy as to where that line is, and whether Greer County is in Texas or in Oklahoma?

Mr. CULBERSON. Not at all.

Mr. TELLER. It does not raise that question?

Mr. CULBERSON. Not at all. The Supreme Court of the United States decided where the line ought to be under the treaty, but it did not, by its decree, fix the location of the line on the ground. This bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall locate the line actually on the ground, but it is not intended to disturb the boundary line.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask whether there is any report from the committee on this bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no written report. The bill is reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE. There is no written report at all from the committee on the bill? What member of the committee reported the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was reported by the Senator's colleague from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE. Without any written report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without any written report.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me this is a pretty important bill, opening a very large claim against the United States. I should like to hear something from the committee in regard to it if there is present a member of the committee who reported the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I have not looked at this bill, and I was not present when it was reported. I do not know whether it commits us to paying anything or whether it leaves it to Congress to determine whether it will pay. The Senator from Texas can tell us that.

Mr. CULLOM. He has stated that twice.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have already stated that it does not commit Congress to the payment of a cent to the State of Texas. It is simply a method, determined upon after full and careful consideration, to ascertain the facts which must be in the possession of the Congress before it can determine the question intelligently.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose, then, it will be still left to the Congress whether there is any equitable claim on the part of Texas on the Government of the United States?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this lays the foundation, as I understand it, for a claim which may be of very great magnitude. It seems to me we should hear something in regard to it from the committee which has had it under consideration.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the claim can be made without the ascertainment of the facts sought to be ascertained; and if the claim is to be made, certainly Congress ought to be furnished with the most authentic information which it is practicable to obtain.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me this authorizes an accounting which may open up a very large claim. I know nothing about it except what I have heard this afternoon, but it seems to me to be a pretty important bill to pass under a unanimous-consent request. We have no written report from the committee in regard to it, and no member of the committee apparently is present to explain it to the Senate. I think it had better lie over, Mr. President, until we can examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. PETTUS. If the Senator from Massachusetts objects, I should like to be allowed to state that the Judiciary Committee examined the bill carefully for a considerable time.

One of the purposes of the bill is to locate on the ground the exact parallel. The Supreme Court fixed a parallel as a boundary, but it did not locate that parallel and had no means of doing it. This is to locate the parallel at that spot, and also to ascertain facts by which Congress might be able, if it saw fit, to do justice in the matter according to its judgment. That is about the whole of it. The committee was careful in its consideration. I supposed the Senator from Massachusetts had put in a written report, but I am informed that he did not.

Mr. LODGE. By whom was the bill reported from the Judiciary Committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By the Senator's colleague.

Mr. LODGE. I think it would be better to wait until the Senator who reported the bill comes here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

MARY E. M'DONALD.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2584) for the relief of Mary E. McDonald.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to Mary E. McDonald and Stephen C. Brown, owners of the McDonald hatching jar and McDonald universal hatching jar, $2,468.11 each, the same to be compensation in full for the use by the United States of all hatching jars invented by the late Marshall McDonald, and for all rights in jars now possessed by Mary E. McDonald and Stephen C. Brown, and for the right of the United States hereafter to use the patents on the jars.

It further proposes to pay to Mary E. McDonald, widow of Marshall McDonald, late Commissioner of Fisheries, $5,000, the same to be compensation in full for the use by the United States of the McDonald egg-transportation crate, the McDonald improved cod-hatching box, the McDonald hatching bucket, the McDonald trout can, and of all other inventions of Marshall McDonald, and for their transfer to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN L. SMITHMEYER AND PAUL J. PELZ.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 186) for the relief of John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not think that bill ought to be passed without more mature consideration than it can have here at this time, and I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. STEWART. I appeal to the Senator from Arkansas to withdraw his objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not now.

Mr. STEWART. Then I give notice that I shall call this bill up immediately after the morning hour on Tuesday next, I will say, so that there will be ample time. I will make the motion then to call it up. I should like to state that this is a meritorious bill and one that ought to be passed. Great injustice has been done in this case, as I can show in five minutes, if I am given the opportunity. I shall move to take up the bill next Tuesday.

BRIDGE ACROSS BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW, LOUISIANA.

Mr. McENERY. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8952) to authorize the New Orleans and Northwestern Railway Company, its successors and assigns, to build and maintain a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, in the State of Louisiana.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GRAND FORKS, N. DAK.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 159) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Grand Forks, N. Dak.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "one hundred and eighty;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts and post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Grand Forks and State of North Dakota, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $180,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out from line 21, page 3, to line 2 on page 4, in the following words:

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUANCE OF BONDS IN TERRITORIES.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4075) to amend an act to prohibit the passage of special or local laws in the Territories, to limit the Territorial indebtedness, and so forth.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. BATE. That is a very important bill, sir, giving power to the Territories to issue bonds, and it has property qualifications to enable citizens to vote. I do not think the bill ought to be disposed of in this manner this evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee objects.

Mr. BATE. I am sorry to do it.

Mr. SHOUP. Then I ask that it may go over without prejudice.

Mr. BATE. Oh, certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does go over without prejudice.

PREVENTION OF FOREST FIRES.

Mr. BARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8585) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent forest fires on the public domain," approved February 24, 1897.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

It proposes to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent forest fires on the public domain," approved February 24, 1897, so as to read:

That any person who shall willfully or maliciously set on fire, or cause to be set on fire, any timber, underbrush, or grass upon the public domain, or shall leave or suffer fire to burn unattended near any timber or other inflammable material, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the same shall be fined in a sum not more than $5,000 or be imprisoned for a term of not more than two years, or both.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall build a fire in or near any forest, timber, or other inflammable material upon the public domain shall, before leaving said fire, totally extinguish the same. Any person failing to do so shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the same shall be fined in a sum not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned for a term of not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 3. That in all cases arising under this act the fines collected shall be paid into the public-school fund of the county in which the lands where the offense was committed are situated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIMMONS REEF AND LANSING SHOAL, LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 168) for change in location of aids to navigation on Simmons Reef and Lansing Shoal, in Lake Michigan. It will take only a moment. It is merely to change a light-ship and remove a floating light.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Light-House Board to remove the light-ship No. 55, now on Simmons Reef, in Lake Michigan, near the Straits of Mackinac, to Lansing Shoal, and provides that the gas buoy on Lansing Shoal shall be removed so as to take the place of the light-ship to be removed from Simmons Reef.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANSON MILLS.

Mr. COCKRELL obtained the floor.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 104.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BATE. I hope the joint resolution I have indicated will be considered.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Iowa has moved that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BATE. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. ALLISON. For what purpose?

Mr. COCKRELL. I yielded to the Senator from Tennessee in order that he might secure the passage of a joint resolution, intending to move to adjourn after that had been considered.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I will withdraw the motion in order that the Senator from Tennessee may present his case, whatever it may be.

Mr. BATE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution I have named.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (S. R. 104) to amend the joint resolution permitting Anson Mills, colonel of Third Regiment United States Cavalry, to accept and exercise the functions of boundary commissioner on the part of the United States, approved December 12, 1893.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BATE. I hope the Senator will allow the joint resolution to be passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope it may be passed.

Mr. CARTER. I think the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] should be present when this joint resolution is considered.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has he any objection to it?

Mr. CARTER. I am not aware that he has any.

Mr. HAWLEY. It has been favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BATE. The joint resolution has already been read, and it can be passed in a moment if there are no objections to it. If there are objections to it, I can explain the matter satisfactorily.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is a matter of entirely simple, straightforward justice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana withdraw his motion?

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes have it, and the Senate refuses to adjourn.

Mr. BATE. Now I ask that the joint resolution may be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Culberson,	Martin,	Spooner,
Allison,	Cullom,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Bacon,	Frye,	Pettigrew,	Sullivan,
Bard,	Hawley,	Pettus,	Taliaferro,
Bate,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.	Teller,
Berry,	Kean,	Quarles,	Tillman,
Burrows,	Lodge,	Scott,	Turley,
Cockrell,	McEnery,	Simon,	Warren.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the roll call 32 Senators have responded to their names. There is no quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 27, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 26, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment before that motion is submitted, so as to present a request for unanimous consent, made at the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. BRICK] and other gentlemen, that ten days' leave be granted to print remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural free delivery?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman refer to those who took part in the discussion of the bill only?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No, Mr. Speaker, I refer to all gentlemen who may desire to exercise that privilege.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. LOUD was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. DALZELL in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, before that I wish to submit a request. In the course of my remarks on yesterday I had occasion to refer to several statements furnished me by the Post-Office Department. I now ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to incorporate such statements in my remarks, and also to extend the remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Before proceeding with the next paragraph of the bill I have an amendment to the one now under consideration, on page 16. In lines 14 to 17, inclusive, I desire to submit an amendment in the following works: Strike out the words "seven hundred and forty-eight," and also the letter "b" at the end of line 14; and in lines 15 and 16 strike out "four hundred and seventy-nine," and also the words "at $1,300 each," and insert "twelve hundred and twenty-seven;" so that the total number in that class shall have their salaries increased to $1,400 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "seven hundred and forty-eight" and insert "twelve hundred and twenty-seven;" so that it will read "1,227 clerks, class 5." Also strike out "b" at the end of line 14.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman this amendment is one which I think the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads will not seriously object to. One thousand four hundred dollars is the maximum salary allowed by law to railway postal clerks of class 5. By the provisions of this bill we increase the salary of 748 of these clerks to the maximum, allowing the remainder, 479, to receive only the same salary they have been receiving heretofore, and I have as yet been unable to hear from the chairman of the committee or any other member of the committee any reason why there should be any discrimination between the railway postal clerks of the same class.

I can not understand why the chairman of the committee proposes this discrimination. It is certainly not in the interest of the efficiency of the service to require men of the same class to work at a different rate of compensation. The tendency will be to demoralize the service where you require the same duties of men and then discriminate against one portion of the men of that class and in favor of another portion by giving them $1,400 and requiring the remaining portion of that class to work at $1,300. That is certainly a discrimination that, in my judgment, would lead to inefficiency, rather than to efficiency, and would naturally tend to injure the service. I therefore hope the amendment will be adopted, increasing the salaries of all the men of class 5 to $1,400.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I outlined yesterday about as fully as I could the reasons why an amendment of this kind should not prevail. Of course if this amendment prevails, the gentleman proposes, I suppose, to offer the same amendment to class 4. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that I may have the attention of the committee. This is a matter of vital importance. The gentleman says that these men are all performing the same kind of service. That is not true. While there are very near this number now in what is called class 5, except, perhaps, 150 of them, yet gentlemen can readily see they can not be performing the same character of service, because we have not as many full railway postal cars as the gentleman proposes in the number here, and the gentleman must remember that on many trains there are four postal cars; and it will be found there are not to exceed 748, the number which your committee have recommended after a most careful investigation.

There are not to exceed 748 who have charge of cars on trains, and this segregation was made here on an equitable basis. The General Superintendent took the hardest runs—took all of the night runs and all of the long runs. He said, as any man must see, that this is a service far superior to that performed by the other 400, which the gentleman proposes to raise to $1,400.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me one question for information?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then, I understand, you have provided for those who have charge of cars, and the helpers the gentleman proposes to provide for. Is that the distinction?

Mr. LOUD. That is what the gentleman substantially proposes. He proposes not alone that the men in charge of the cars receive the maximum salary, but some men in the same car, as helpers, as you may call them. The Post-Office Committee gave this question——

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think the gentleman will insist that it is proposed to raise the salaries of helpers to $1,400. I will ask the gentleman this question: Is it your understanding, or do you wish the House to understand, that all the men in those night runs are of class 5?

Mr. LOUD. No; not all the men.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well.

Mr. LOUD. All in charge of cars are.

Mr. TAWNEY. All in charge of cars; yes.

Mr. LOUD. But there are other men working there in these cars who are of class 5.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, does the gentleman propose to put them all on the same plane?

Mr. LOUD. Men in charge of cars receive the same salary.

Mr. TAWNEY. All of a class are supposed to be put on the same plane?

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman forgets that he does not take alone class 5, but his amendment will add a great many to it. Take the run from New York to Pittsburg, where there are four cars on one of its trains. On the run from New York to Buffalo there are four cars on one of its trains; and you will find on these two runs alone more than forty cars are on this one line.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman answer this question: How many are there in class 5?

Mr. LOUD. I can not give you the exact number now.

Mr. TAWNEY. Twelve hundred and twenty-seven.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. There are, according to the report of the General Superintendent.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There are 1,040 of these clerks.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California be extended for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California be extended ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I hope that conversation on the floor may cease, so that we can hear.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say now that I will not take the ten minutes if not interrupted. I want to say that the most careful segregation has been made here, and that if the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota shall prevail the effect of it will be to not alone put men who are in charge of cars at a salary of $1,400, but put men who might be termed helpers in that car at the same salary; and the same rule will apply to class 4, if the amendment be offered.

I know, Mr. Chairman, what the effort is to increase the salaries of these clerks. I have in my hand a postal card which might divulge, perhaps, the methods which have been practiced during the last few days; and I hope I may have the attention of the committee while I read it:

A letter from Mr. TAWNEY—

I suppose he refers to the gentleman from Minnesota—

just received, states that he desires every railway postal clerk to at once write or wire his member of Congress in substance as follows:

"Provision in Post-Office appropriation bill for railway postal clerks is not satisfactory, as nearly all of the increase of salary goes to the office force. Substitute H. R. 2 for this provision."

He also states:

I called on Captain White—

General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, evidently according to the gentleman's correspondence in league with him; an official receiving $3,500 a year in league with the gentleman from Minnesota to defeat this appropriation bill and increase the salary of the postal clerks.

I called on Captain White, and he informs me that neither Mr. LOUD nor any member of the committee consulted him or the Department in regard to the provisions of the bill, either before or since it was reported to the House.

That is false.

He states that Captain White is assisting him—in putting our bill in shape to be offered as a substitute for the Loud measure at the proper time. This information, it seems to me, should settle the matter as to the Department being back of the Loud measure. Now, let us stand together, for the Department is standing by their recommendation of H. R. 2; then why should we desert our own cause?

I suppose he refers to the gentleman from Minnesota—

Circulate this information among the boys as much as possible and see to it that they act promptly, as Mr. TAWNEY says the bill is liable to come up at any day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that I may not be forced at this time to go into this whole proposition that is now confronting Congress. This is but a part of a scheme, and I say I hope, I plead with the gentleman from Minnesota, with the information in my possession, I hope he will not force me here to present to this House the form of concerted attack that is being made upon Congress to-day, and I plead with the gentleman to desist here.

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have given this matter most careful consideration. The General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service did make this segregation. While he did not make it of his own free will, he did make it at the suggestion of the committee, but he did say that this segregation was fair, that the men we proposed to pay $1,400 a year on this bill were performing a great deal more service than those that remained at $1,300, and so those relating to class 4.

This House is upon the very threshold of this proposition. Pass this amendment and you must pass other bills. Pass this amendment and you will have an opportunity to increase the Post-Office appropriation bill fully $15,000,000 this year. Now, I plead and beg this House to stop right where we are.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. This classification of salary in your bill is satisfactory to the Post-Office Department in charge of this matter?

Mr. LOUD. I might say yes, and I might say no. There is a great deal of conversation that has passed between the Post-Office Department and myself. I know that the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service wants these men to receive more salary than the gentleman proposes, but I know that the Postmaster-General wants this matter to stop where it is.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the Postmaster-General recommended the reclassification which was offered yesterday?

Mr. LOUD. The Postmaster-General, in a perfunctory way, without understanding the question, did indorse the report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. When I called the attention of the Postmaster-General—and I did contemplate even going beyond him—when I called his attention to the position taken by his assistant he was paralyzed to learn the condition existing, and he said that so far as it lay in his power he would stop it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to understand how the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] construes the amendment I have offered so as to claim the result to be as he says it will be. He knows as well as any other man who has ever read the reclassification of 1881 that class 5, authorized by that reclassification, expressly provides that all employees in the railway postal service in that class should receive $1,400, and that that is their maximum salary. Owing, as I said yesterday, to the fact that there was a deficiency in the appropriation bill some years ago, the men in this class received only $1,300 one year, and their salary has never been restored from that time until now.

Now the gentleman from California comes in here with a proposition that restores the salary of only 748, leaving the remaining 429 to continue their service at the $1,300 rate.

If a part of that class is entitled to $1,400, then all of them are entitled to it. The law creating the class provides that the men of that class may receive $1,400 per annum, and why should a portion of them receive it and not all of them? That is a question the chairman of the committee has never answered and can not answer.

There can be no objections to it whatever, and I say that it is unjust for this House to discriminate in favor of 784 men of that class and against 479 men of the same class. These helpers who work in the cars are not in that class, as claimed by the chairman. It is only those who are in class 5 who receive the benefit of the maximum salary which the law allows these men, and not helpers. He knows better than any man that helpers are not in this class.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the gentleman wherein the duties performed by men who are allowed $1,400 a year differ from those performed by the men who receive $1,300 a year? Is there any difference?

Mr. TAWNEY. The subdivision which was made by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was made on the assumption that the man who works on a night run is entitled to more compensation than the man who works on a day run. That is the only basis for that subdivision. Yet the gentleman knows that the man who gets up at 1 o'clock in the night to go upon his run is classed as a day man.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads has seen fit to read a postal card. The author of the card I do not know; and I do not know that he has given his name. But he speaks of what I said in a letter to a friend of mine in the railway postal service, suggesting to him what the men in that service could do in order to secure consideration of the proposition which they have asked for and which the Department has recommended for the past six years.

I do not deny that I made the suggestion. I made it only as a friend of those who have never yet been able to receive any consideration whatever at the hands of the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I did so because I believe they are entitled not only to consideration, but that they are entitled to the reclassification they ask and which all of their superiors, including the Postmaster-General, recommend.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I certainly hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will prevail. I think the last statement he has made ought to clear the atmosphere sufficiently to show the members of the House the justice and equity of the amendment. As I understand, the amendment calls for an increase of $100 per annum for each of 479 men, which would involve an additional expenditure of $47,900—not the fabulous amount which the chairman of the Post-Office Committee said only a few moments ago would be the result.

I think it is admitted that these men all do the same character of work except that those who receive $1,400 a year work at night, while those who receive $1,300 a year are employed in the daytime. But, as was stated by the gentleman from Minnesota a few minutes ago, if these clerks start to work after 1 o'clock in the morning they are called day clerks and are allowed only $1,300 a year.

It may not have been made evident to members of the House that the increase to those who work at night is made by the present bill reported by the committee; and why any discrimination should be made between men doing the same character of work and who have been in the employ of the Government the same number of years and who are equally efficient as indicated by the fact that they are all put in class 1, merely because one class work at night and the other day, is more than I can understand.

I cheerfully commend and indorse the position taken by the gentleman from Minnesota, which has been complained of by the gentleman from California, in undertaking to see that the railway mail clerks in the different sections of the country called the attention of members of Congress to this condition of affairs and to the fact that certain classes of clerks are being favored at the expense of others.

It seems to me, as I have stated before, that some remedy ought to be had; and even if it does call for an appropriation—not as large by any means, I think, as the amount stated by the chairman of the committee—I believe we ought to make a start in increasing the pay of the employees in the various branches of the Post-Office Department.

It is admitted, but I have never seen the question brought before the House by the committee who investigated the matter, that the Government is paying millions of dollars more than the service is worth to the railroad corporations for mail transportation. If the money thus unfairly and unjustly paid to railroad corporations for the carriage of the mails were devoted to the proper increase of the salaries of the post-office clerks, and the railway mail clerks, and the letter carriers, we would not have any talk about a deficit in the revenues of the Post-Office Department or any scandal regarding the amounts paid railroad corporations.

Your deficit arises from the fact that you are paying exorbitant rates to railroad companies, while you pay insufficient wages to the men who work for the Government in the post offices and on the railway cars and as distributing carriers throughout the different cities and towns and villages of our country.

When the railway mail clerk enters upon his duty on the train every day, he does not know that he will ever return to his home alive. He risks his life every time he puts himself into that railway car to do the business of the Government. Statistics prove that the death rate among this class of employees is greater than in the Army, except when engaged in regular warfare. The man who enters the Government service as an employee in the railway mail post-office work takes a risk just the same as the man who shoulders his musket and goes forth to defend his country's flag.

The life is one of constant danger and peril, and the Government should be willing to give these men equitable salaries. The bill known as H. R. 2 is, in my judgment, the measure which we should consider at this time. This bill adjudicated the salaries of all classes of railway mail clerks and is a just and proper measure.

Inasmuch as this bill was ruled out on a point of order, I am heartily in favor of this present proposition increasing the salaries of all clerks in the first class to $1,400, which proposition, if it meets the approval of the House, will eventually prove beneficial to all the clerks in the lower grades. In conclusion, let me say, Mr. Chairman, if we are honest and not hypocrites, reduce the amounts paid to the railroads to a reasonable basis and pay the amounts thus saved in a just increase in the salaries of all underpaid employees of the Post-Office Department.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TAWNEY, it was agreed to, there being on a division (called for by Mr. SHATTUC)—ayes 83, noes 32.

The Clerk read as follows:

For actual and necessary expenses of General Superintendent, assistant general superintendent, chief clerk office General Superintendent, division superintendents, assistant division superintendent, chief clerks, and railway postal clerks, while actually traveling on business of the Department and away from their several designated headquarters, $40,000.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, on page 17 of the bill, in line 10, I move, after the word "superintendent," to add the letter "s;" so that it will read "division superintendents."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for Railway Mail Service, $9,761,300.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the total amount carried by these various items be corrected. We have made an amendment which changes the provision somewhat. I will prepare it and hand it to the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will make the necessary changes or corrections in conformity with the action of the committee, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from New York and Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, $171,238.75: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

For continuing necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Kansas City, Mo., to Newton, Kans., $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the item in the bill which has just been read is one of the items where by agreement two hours were to be allowed for debate—one hour on each side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

with line 3 and ending with line 10, has been read by the Clerk, and the Clerk proceeded to read the next paragraph, beginning with line 11 and ending with line 17. Now, I understand the preceding paragraph to which I have referred is adopted by the committee, there being no point made, and no objection to it, and no amendment offered. I make the inquiry, therefore, of the Chair, whether or not that provision has been adopted and is a part of the bill without further action of the committee?

Now, two hours' debate was provided for by agreement on these two paragraphs of the bill, one of them relating to the fast-mail service and special facilities between New York and New Orleans, which provision was read through and the paragraph passed without an amendment offered or a point of order made against it. The next paragraph was also read. I desire to ask the Chair if the paragraph to which I have referred and to which no amendment or objection was made has not been adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that by unanimous consent the two paragraphs in question were set aside with the understanding that when they were reached for consideration in the committee, there would be two hours' debate upon them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But, Mr. Chairman, I understand that the two hours' debate was to be allowed, but no express order was made to consider these paragraphs together, as I remember it, under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. But they embrace one and the same subject.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They relate to different sections of the country and to different roads—different routes of railway—and they have been provided for as separate items heretofore. They have always been considered separately, and therefore I desire to submit the point of order that the first paragraph, beginning with line 3 and ending with line 10, has been read and passed without objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that after the expiration of the two hours' debate each paragraph will be taken up and considered under the rule for amendment and debate as provided for the consideration of other portions of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But my point is that the first paragraph, having been read and passed without objection and without amendment, has gone beyond the control of the committee and it can not now be taken up again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the paragraphs have only been read, up to this time, for the purpose of bringing them before the House so that the two hours' debate can be had, according to the agreement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would ask permission of the Chair to reserve the point of order temporarily until I can examine the RECORD in reference to the agreement.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the time allowed for this discussion is one hour on a side on the two paragraphs?

The CHAIRMAN. That was the agreement, and that one hour should be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and one hour by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand the request of the gentleman from Alabama to reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asked to reserve the point of order until he can examine the RECORD.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to interpose an objection to that, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to see the time of the committee wasted in a discussion of two or three hours, as we saw on yesterday, and then the whole subject disposed of on a point of order. If there is a point of order to be made against this provision of the bill, let us have it settled now.

I dislike very much to object, and do it without any disrespect to the gentleman from Alabama; but I think we ought to dispose of it now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Iowa makes his objection at too late a date in this discussion.

Mr. HEPBURN. My point is that, if there is a suggestion of a point of order, it must be disposed of at once, and can not be held up indefinitely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the objection is made too late. The gentleman did not make it in time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know that there is any power, under the rules of the House, in any member, or a number of members, to reserve points of order indefinitely.

Mr. PAYNE. And the point of order can be renewed at any time.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit me a moment?

I do not think the gentleman from Alabama wants to take advantage of a technicality. The proposition was made in good faith, that there should be two hours' debate—one hour on each side—on the subject of fast-mail facilities. The Clerk is reading that provision of the bill which will be taken up in this order for consideration under the five-minutes rule after the two hours' debate. That is the complete proposition, embracing the two paragraphs, I will state to the gentleman.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I inquire what the point of order reserved by the gentleman was?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman can not reserve the point of order in the face of an objection on the part of any member of the committee. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] desires to insist on his point of order and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] insists that it shall not be reserved, it must be disposed of now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I was not in the Hall when the agreement about debate took place. If it was agreed that these two paragraphs should be considered together, and that was the real intent of the agreement, why, of course, I do not want to take any technical advantage by raising the point of order. The reason I asked for the privilege of reserving it was to examine the RECORD and see what the exact agreement was; that was all.

Mr. LOUD. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that I made the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The order was not with respect to the paragraph, but with respect to the subject of necessary and special facilities. That, of course, covers both paragraphs. Those paragraphs were read for the purpose of having them before the House for debate, and when the debate is concluded they will be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I will not insist on the point of order, if that was the understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, in order that the proposition may be before the House, let it be understood that the proposition is to strike out the two paragraphs for special mail facilities provided for in the pending bill.

The first of these propositions has been before Congress repeatedly. At every session, I believe, since I have had the honor to be a member of this House, we have been confronted with the proposition for special mail facilities on the route extending from New York to New Orleans. Later on, in one of the recent appropriation bills, special facilities were granted to the road leading to Kansas City.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that both these propositions are fundamentally wrong, apart from the question whether they really contribute to facilitate or expedite the mails or not. I believe that these two paragraphs are relics of the most pernicious system of legislation that has ever invaded the Halls of Congress. If these special appropriations are good in this instance, there is no reason why they should not be applied generally, and, if applied generally, the result would be that the company with the greatest influence would get the greatest appropriation, and the company with the least influence would get the least appropriation, and we should appropriate the money and take chances on what we got for it.

I believe it ought to be a fundamental principle in the appropriation of the public moneys of the people that we ought to know precisely what we get for an appropriation and what we are paying for. One of the objections I have to the present railway mail system is that the best experts in the country disagree as to what we are now actually paying for the transportation of our mails. They differ all the way from 2 to 8 cents on the pound.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. LITTLE. Why, certainly.

Mr. MADDOX. Did we not appoint a commission two years ago to investigate this matter and report to this House?

Mr. LITTLE. I will state that Congress did, but that unfortunately that commission have not been able, as they say, to complete their work and furnish Congress at this session with the information that they acquired in that investigation.

Mr. MADDOX. I hope the gentleman will tell us who that commission are and why they have not reported.

Mr. LITTLE. I can not name them all. I believe the chairman of the Post-Office Committee [Mr. LOUD] is one, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING] is another, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] is a third. The others I do not remember. But somehow we get this information in spots. We got some of it yesterday and some the other day that was really valuable; but neither the House nor the Post-Office Committee have had the benefit of this evidently very valuable information. Apart from that, we shall, therefore, have to proceed with the lights before us on this question.

Not only do I believe that these appropriations are pernicious in the principle involved, but I believe they are an injustice to the other railway service of the country. I believe they add to the complications and difficulties in the way of the Department in making proper agreements and schedules with the other lines of railway through the country. If we pay the railways mentioned in these two propositions the extra pay of $196,000, why should we not pay like amounts to other railroads that have increased their speed to a like degree or would do so? Strange to say, notwithstanding the appropriations to these two railway systems, there have been increases of speed all over the country equal to the increases given by these roads, and that without any special appropriation. Let me read just for a moment. If you will examine the report of the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, you will find three or four pages here naming the railroads and showing the advances that have been made in the time and schedules of these roads without any subsidy and upon the pay that they already get. To give you a little more light on that question I will read a statement on this subject furnished in this report.

He says:

As the result of this improved schedule the mails arrive at San Francisco twelve hours earlier than previously.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, it is utterly impossible to hear.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order, and gentlemen will cease conversation.

Mr. LITTLE (continuing)—

Helena, seven hours; Spokane, eight hours; Seattle, ten hours; Portland, twelve hours; Chicago, three and one-half hours; Omaha, eight hours; Ogden, twelve hours; St. Paul and Minneapolis, six hours.

So, by an examination, if you take these schedules and go over them, you will find that the postal authorities have made arrangements in advancing these mails from east to west almost equal to, if not in some instances greater than, the advance made in the mail from New York to New Orleans. This schedule under which they are now operating I understand was first put in force eight or ten years ago when the subsidy was originally granted. The present schedule was made when the road put on the special train. At that time under the special schedule that it advanced the delivery of the mails on that line I do not deny. In doing that I believe that the company at that time did no more than its duty under the contract that it had with the Government. It is the duty of all railroads hauling mail to deliver it with all reasonable dispatch and facility under their contracts.

There has been no man upon this floor that I have heard in all this debate that has ever claimed that the present pay the railways get for the transportation of the mails is not ample and sufficient to guarantee them in delivering it with all reasonable practical speed and facility. If that be true, why should we give any preference to any particular line? Why should we award to these two lines of railroads specific appropriations for the purposes that are not awarded to other railways throughout the country? Why you will find.

Mr. DAVIS. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him. I will say that this train carrying the mails to Georgia and Florida leaves New York at an early hour in the morning, an hour too early to make it profitable as a passenger train. This train takes out the New York papers and gets them to Washington early in the morning, and leaving here at 11 o'clock proceeds southward, and if it were not for this train and this schedule that service would not be given. I mean that these facilities would not be given to the people of that section. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. LITTLE. I can answer that question by the language of the gentleman in charge of the Railway Mail Service, Mr. Grant. It was read the other day by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL], and I will quote it again:

There seems to be no justification for the special-facilities payment, judging from results obtained. If we treated all lines on this basis—

That is the very proposition suggested on this early departure—

then we should pay the Northwestern Railroad for running an early morning train from Chicago at 3.45 a. m. to Fort Howard, Wis.; also for Cedar Rapids from Chicago. We should also pay the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad for a train leaving Chicago at the same hour and running to Marion and the West; also the same road for a train from Chicago to Milwaukee and St. Paul; the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy for a train leaving Chicago at 3 a. m. and running to Burlington and Omaha; the Monon Route for a train leaving Chicago in the early morning for Cincinnati. The Illinois Central also has a train leaving Chicago about the same hour, as has also the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago and the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern.

So in the increases that I have been calling your attention to, in almost every instance the early morning trains' schedules have been changed so as to leave most of the cities at a very early hour, some as early as 2.30 a. m.; and this that the gentleman speaks of at 4 o'clock a. m. And these superseded your period in being earlier; and I say, as the Department says, that it is an injustice to the other railroads that give the country equal service; and not only is it an injustice, but it is absolutely in the way of the Department in making these extra arrangements.

Mr. DAVIS. Why is that true?

Mr. LITTLE. Let me read from the Postmaster-General.

Mr. DAVIS. May I quote from the bill itself?

Mr. LITTLE. All right.

Mr. DAVIS. It says that if it is not necessary for him to use this money—that the Postmaster-General is not compelled to use it or any part thereof:

Unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interests of the postal service.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; I will answer that.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Postmaster-General does not regard it as necessary, he would not use it. If he does regard it as necessary to give these people this fast mail, he ought to use it.

Mr. LITTLE. There is nothing in that argument. It has been repeated here time and time over in face of the declaration of the officers of the Department, when they had refused to recommend this appropriation, and Congress goes on and makes the appropriation anyhow; they felt that it was mandatory upon them; that it was an expression of Congress that "we want this money expended, whether you think it necessary or not." Here is the language of the Department, and I commend it to the consideration of my distinguished friend. It was the answer of the Postmaster-General, and this very question was covered:

Well, the Department would have power to withhold it, but having recommended to Congress the advisability of withholding it, the Department is bound to assume that Congress desires the appropriation to be expended so long as it is made.

Which is a sound proposition.

When the opinion of the Department is directly against the appropriation and Congress nevertheless makes the appropriation, it by that act overrides the opinion of the Postmaster-General, and he naturally feels bound to carry out this expressed will of Congress.

The Department comes this year with this language by the Postmaster-General:

In submitting the estimates for several years past this office has declined to include the item of special facilities, for the reason heretofore stated, but appropriations have, however, been made.

Now, in the face of that declaration, Congress walks up and makes appropriations after the Department has advised Congress that it is not necessary and they do not want it. It is equivalent to a command on the part of Congress to expend this money, whether it facilitates the mails or not.

But to the other point which I believe is important in this matter. I feel as friendly to the postal service as any man on the floor. I want all sections of the country to have as good service as it is possible to give them, but I say we ought not to adopt the theory of giving to any one line what we do not give to the others; we should treat them all alike by refusing this unqualified gift of the public moneys.

Now, the Department makes this statement, and I read from the evidence before that distinguished commission whose report we have not got, but a part of which has been put in the RECORD.

This question was asked of the Postmaster-General:

Is not the tendency, where we give subsidies to one line, for others to ask or expect the same kind of pay?

Does not that sound reasonable? That would be true in the case of men, and it is true in the case of corporations. Listen to the answer:

The tendency is to produce discontent and dissatisfaction, if not hesitancy on the part of the other roads in giving us similar service without special appropriation.

That declaration applies to every road in the United States where the Postmaster-General makes an appeal to them to advance their schedule, or to move their trains in the interest of expediting the mails through the country.

I regard that as one of the worst elements of that appropriation. Notwithstanding the discontent that it breeds, we have a large number of increases shown here in the report of the Assistant Postmaster-General. I hope the time is coming when this House on this proposition will meet the responsibility and put an end to this pernicious system of legislation. It is pernicious because it produces this system of favoritism under the law. Who can tell me that if this appropriation is stopped the service running to New Orleans will be stopped? They have got a paying train. They say they only make stops at great distances, but they evidently on that train gather all the long-distance travel. They carry on it tons and tons of mail for which they are paid under the appropriations in this bill a price that I believe is more than 100 per cent above what they ought to have. And yet we come here and are called upon, in the face of the recommendation of the officers charged with the responsibility in this mail service throughout the country, to drop in the pockets of this company $171,000 and in another one $125,000.

I do not believe we ought to do it; and as the House showed some small signs of reform yesterday, I think it is a good time to carry that reform out and put the knife to these last two examples of this character of legislation in an appropriation bill. I believe it is our solemn duty. If these lines should temporarily suffer some delay in their mails, I believe it would be more than compensated for by the good and substantial interest and honest service that they and the country would get. It stands in the way, it is a menace to every proposition of the Postmaster-General to increase the expedition of the mails throughout the country. Why make an appropriation when we do not know whether the mails will stop or not? We do not know whether the trains will run or not, and we do know we are already paying a high price for the service they are rendering the Government. We do not know what we are paying for, whether we are paying for anything or nothing. In the name of common honesty, I protest. For the good of the public service, and for the honor of Congress, and in the name of just legislation, I urge that this appropriation should be stricken from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I come from the South. I believe in the South. We have been oppressed in many ways for over a quarter of a century, and I want to say to some of my friends from the South that if we ever expect to take our place, the place that belongs to us in this Union, not merely politically, but from an industrial standpoint, Representatives from the South must stand on this floor and demand what rightfully belongs to us. The old cry of the Republican party and the gentlemen from the other side of the House from the North used to be "The old flag and an appropriation." The South to-day is as much in favor of the old flag as our friends on that side of the House——

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have only fifteen minutes, and I ask the gentleman not to interrupt me. But I want to say the reason you find $30 per capita in New York State, large amounts of money in circulation in Ohio and Indiana, and five and six and seven dollars in circulation per capita in Alabama, in Georgia, in Mississippi, and Arkansas, is because you stand here on the floor of this House representing your people, and when the taxes are gathered from them to put in the Federal Treasury you are willing to let the appropriations go to the North. You are willing to let the expenditure of this money be put into New England and New York and Ohio and the far West, and for constitutional purposes or extreme economy you cut your own people out of their fair distribution of that part of the money.

You can not have prosperity without having a sufficient amount of money in the country and in your State to carry it on. If you will continue the policy of having this money, dragged out of the people of the country in the shape of taxes, put into the Federal Treasury, only to be distributed in the districts which are represented largely by gentlemen on that side of the House, and in your economy cut your own people out, then you need never expect to see real prosperity come to the Southern States.

Now, I am in favor of this proposition for two reasons. I am in favor of it because I believe it aids in building up the business interests of the Southern States; and I am in favor of it because it is an appropriation that goes to a Southern enterprise.

I see propositions in this bill reported by this same committee—reported without criticism or without opposition by gentlemen of this committee who come from the South and who yet oppose this appropriation going to the South. A certain paragraph below the one now pending—a provision for the transportation of foreign mails—appropriates $2,248,000. In that appropriation is carried—I do not say it is the whole appropriation—a subsidy to the foreign ships sailing to and from this country—the trans-Atlantic ships—a subsidy of $2 for every mile they run. And yet they do not have to carry the mail.

The Postmaster-General, in his report, says that although these vessels are paid $2 a mile for every mile they run at sea, to carry this foreign mail, he gives it to the first ship that touches the port, whether it be an American or an English ship; and if it be English, he pays them in addition for carrying the mail. Why? To expedite the mails—to facilitate the business of the country. And I think it is right. But that company is owned in New York; that country handles the foreign mails that we are not directly interested in. Yet since I have been in this Congress I have failed to see one of our Southern members attack that appropriation. But we do find them attacking the only appropriation that carries this money to our own section of the country.

Now, I believe in both appropriations. I believe that to facilitate the mail builds up business; and to build up the business of this country builds up the prosperity of the people.

The argument as to the necessity of this appropriation is very simple. Gentlemen have repeatedly within the last year or two asked, "Can anybody on this floor say that if this appropriation were withdrawn this train would not run?" Why, sir, I will ask in reply, Can anyone on this floor assert that if the $2 a mile that we are paying to these trans-Atlantic steamers were withdrawn, they would stop running? No, they would probably run anyhow; but they would not expedite the mails as is being done now. If you withdraw this appropriation, I do not charge that the Southern Railroad and the Pacific Railroad would not run two daily trains going south, but I do say that they would not run two daily trains going south at times when we want the trains to run.

Mr. LITTLE. I would like the gentleman to State what part of this money goes to the South.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It goes to a Southern enterprise.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman say that enterprise is owned in the South?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This railroad line carries the mails to the Southern people. From its operations wages are paid to men who live in the South and who work on this railroad.

Mr. LITTLE. And if this appropriation were discontinued, would not every one of them get every dollar that he gets now?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know that. This railroad not many years ago was in the hands of a receiver; it was unable to pay its running expenses and the wages of its employees, the men who worked along the line.

Mr. LITTLE. What road does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Southern Railroad, running from Washington to Greenville, Miss.

Mr. LITTLE. And what is the present condition of the finances of the company?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am glad to say the finances of the road are now in excellent condition.

But I say that this appropriation does help to build up a Southern enterprise. The fault I have to find with my friend from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] is not on account of his ideas of economy, but I dislike to see that he and others of my friends on this side of the House, whenever they get ready to put the knife to what they consider extravagant expenditures or to apply rigidly what they consider the rules of economy, are always ready to stick the knife into a Southern enterprise.

Mr. LITTLE. I will say to my friend that while I am in Congress no scheme of this kind will get my approval, no matter where it comes from.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not reproaching my friend on account of his ideas of economy; he is entitled to his own views. But I state as a fact that when a Southern Representative attacks any of these propositions, nine times out of ten he attacks the one that benefits his own people.

Mr. DRIGGS. Is it not the fact that Southern merchants are placed in closer communication with their Northern correspondents through the medium of rapid mail transportation on this railroad line?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Unquestionably; and that is why we want this appropriation continued. I do not know a single city or town, from New Orleans to Washington, whose board of trade and representative business men have not petitioned that this train be kept on. Why? Because they want to be kept in close communication with the New York merchants and New York manufacturers with whom they do business.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state what particular train would be stopped if this subsidy were discontinued?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no evidence that any train would be stopped. I do not say that any will be stopped. All I can say is this: That the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, under whose judgment this allowance is made, uses in a written communication this language:

> It is not possible to say exactly how far the schedule of the Washington and New Orleans railway post-office has been expedited by cutting out the local stops; but by reason of the fact that a third train is operated the whole distance from Washington to New Orleans, which was not the case in 1893, it is fair to conclude that the local passenger traffic is provided for by a third train, thereby relieving the principal mail train of the local stops.

Mr. GAINES. Is it not a fact, let me ask my friend from Alabama, that since the period to which he refers this Southern road has practically been rebuilt—that is to say, they have new tracks, new cars, new locomotive power, new blood in it generally, and that it is one of the leading, wealthiest roads now in the country?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not discussing the condition of the Southern Railroad, Mr. Chairman, but am only alluding to the question as to whether this train can be run at all without the provision made in this bill. They may be, and no doubt are, in excellent condition. There is no doubt about that fact. But no railroad can operate or support a fast train, out of the great centers of our population, that starts at 4 o'clock in the morning, and expect to gain any passenger traffic at that unusual and unreasonable hour. While such a line would catch the fast mail and the early newspapers, yet it could not expect to derive any revenue from its passenger traffic.

Now, this communication between the great centers of New York and the Southern States, as far as the mail service is concerned, is one of immense importance to our people; and while this road can not support its fast train on passenger traffic, yet it affords unusual and very desirable facilities to our business people. It is certain that this line of road can not carry this mail without the extra compensation provided for in this bill.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have only a moment or two, Mr. Chairman, but will yield to the gentleman if he desires it.

Mr. BROMWELL. The train the gentleman speaks of leaves Washington at 11.15—I refer to train No. 35. Is that not correct?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I so understand it.

Mr. BROMWELL. Now, I ask my friend whether that train did not run over this line between Richmond and Danville, Atlanta, and the South generally in 1893?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, sir——

Mr. BROMWELL. Well, I think I can show the gentleman by the time-table that that train was being run at that time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will show the gentleman that it was not then run. I am talking now of the train that is leaving New York, and it is the New York connection—the Eastern connection—that we want for our mail service. If you start the train out of Washington—Washington not being itself a business center—it would be of very little value to our people as far as commerce is concerned. I ask the gentleman from Ohio if there is a place between Danville and Charleston, or any other place on the line of the road, anywhere in South Carolina or North Carolina, which may be regarded as a great commercial center like New York? Now, our people get the mail just that much earlier by this appropriation.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. And is it not a fact that the people will be greatly disappointed if they did not get the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regularly every morning? [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why, of course, Mr. Chairman, the constituents of my friend from Mississippi would consider themselves not only as being unjustly treated, but practically ruined, if they did not get his speeches the next morning. [Laughter.]

But seriously, Mr. Chairman, here is the schedule as it stood before 1893, when this appropriation was adopted. That train left New York at 12.15 a. m. It now leaves at 4.30 a. m., quite a number of hours earlier, and catches, of course, the morning papers and the late mail, and puts us in direct communication with the great commercial centers of the country, whereas when it left at 8 o'clock it did not make connection with these Southern roads going south and carrying the mails.

Now, of course we must have a fast train from Washington to New Orleans. For other parts of the road to have a fast train, without through connections, would be of little service, and yet that fast train from Washington to New Orleans would be of little service to our people unless we have a direct connection with New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. Chairman, I am one of the members of the Post-Office Committee, representing an Iowa district, and I joined in the report recommending the passage of this bill, including the item under discussion. The Post-Office Committee is a nonpartisan and a nonpolitical committee, and at no session of the committee during this session of Congress have party lines been drawn on any question.

It is most amazingly strange to me that these facilities—special mail facilities—for the benefit of the South, with every Northern member of the committee urging the provision—that we should find the appropriation being opposed only by three gentlemen on the floor of the House, and all of them from the South. And, Mr. Chairman, I am very willing to believe that these three gentlemen who dissent from the provisions of the bill to which I am now referring do not represent the sentiment of the Southern people upon the question at issue.

This measure is not of the slightest concern to me personally, or to any of the people whom I represent, or with whom I am acquainted. But gentlemen came before the committee, and members of the committee urged, and the showing was made that without this appropriation, while the same number of trains was sought to be run, the same time-table could not exist, and that these mails would not be distributed over the South generally with the facilities that they have enjoyed for some years past, and which they will continue to enjoy if this appropriation is ingrafted into the law.

The reason I favor this particular appropriation is that it is my judgment that the South needs and wants the service, and in my judgment the South is entitled to it, and hence we have all, as a committee, with four exceptions, agreed that the appropriation ought to be made.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I correct the gentleman? I did not join in the minority report, but the gentleman knows that I have persistently opposed this appropriation.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I modify my statement. I had forgotten that fact. There were three members from the South who signed the minority report, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] dissented at the time from this appropriation, although he did not join in the minority report. Now, if the South does not want these facilities, we of the North certainly ought to have no concern about it. If the South does not want these facilities, then, so far as I am concerned, I shall be perfectly satisfied to have the amendment prevail and the appropriation go out. But I voted in committee in favor of this appropriation, and am now trying to support it by argument, because I have tried to be consistent during my membership on this Post-Office Committee.

How two of the three dissenters can reconcile their present position with their position a few weeks ago is not for me to say, but for them to explain, if they can. One of the dissenters, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURKE], has been perfectly consistent. When the Loud bill was before this House a few weeks ago he took the position that this large deficit should be remedied by carrying into effect the reform that that bill sought to accomplish, but the other two dissenters were then insisting that this deficit should not be stopped in that way, but that those frauds should go on under the pretense of serving the people of the South by distributing matter carried as second-class mail matter. Here to-day we find them opposing this appropriation, upon the ground that our deficit is already too large.

I have favored this proposition, as I favored the passage of the Loud bill, for the reason that, in my judgment, as the postal system has been operative now for more than a century of time, it ought now to be reformed so that the people in all sections of this country can have legitimate mail matter carried and distributed by the most convenient methods, with the utmost speed to all sections of our country, North and South alike. That is the reason why I voted as I did; and I care nothing whether the yeas and nays are called on these propositions, or whether they are not. In committee I voted for the appropriation for the pneumatic-tube service, not because it is of any interest to me, but because I believed it to be for the interest of the postal service. Supplementary to what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] said upon yesterday, I want briefly to allude to that proposition, unless it be thought that the time has gone by for discussing it.

I want to call attention to the fact—and I exceedingly regret that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] is not in his seat—that this nonpartisan Post-Office Committee is made up of 18 members—17 Representatives and the Delegate from New Mexico. I want further to call the attention of that gentleman to the fact that there are but five members of the Post-Office Committee living in cities that could ever possibly hope to have the benefit of the pneumatic-tube service; and I want to call the attention of this House and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] to the fact that in the State of Iowa, from whence I come, we have no hope to have a pneumatic-tube service, and neither want nor need such, and it will not do for the gentleman to argue that this appropriation was reported to this House by reason of the benefits that were to go to certain cities.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. I have been listening to the gentleman for some time and did not wish to interfere with the course of his argument. What I wish to ask the gentleman is this: Reference has been made by him to the effect that this fast mail train will be discontinued if this subsidy is stopped. Can the gentleman cite any testimony before the committee to that effect? I am, and others about me are, very anxious to get this evidence.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I can not refer to the particular testimony, but it was distinctly stated and represented before our committee, and especially, as I recall, by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who claimed to have information, that the schedule would be changed back to where it was. I was urging before the committee that for the life of me I could not, for the time being, see any reason why there should be an appropriation for the run between New York City and Washington, and I was answered with the statement, which seemed to me a complete and satisfactory answer, that there were no benefits asked as between New York and Washington, that the $25,000 for that portion of the line cut no earthly figure, and that the Pennsylvania Railroad much preferred to have it cut off rather than to have it retained; but that with that cut off the connections were destroyed, and we might just as well not undertake to have this increased facility from Washington to New Orleans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I suggest that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCPHERSON] have unanimous consent to extend his remarks.

Mr. LOUD. Unanimous consent has been given to all members to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. If no member desires to be heard, the Clerk will read.

Mr. MOON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I think the attempt to turn the advocacy of this appropriation into a tune of "Hurrah, for Southern rights, hurrah!" will fall by the wayside. This appropriation does not go to any Southern people anywhere upon the surface of the earth. It is an appropriation of $172,000 which goes into the pockets of the members of a railroad syndicate who reside partially in New York, partially in Great Britain, and partially in Germany; so that even if an appeal could be made to me to indorse what I believe to be a job and a wrong upon the ground that it was a Southern job, that appeal could not be made in this particular case.

Here, Mr. Chairman, we find all these propositions hanging together. Here is an appropriation for a railroad that runs down South and for one that runs out West. Here was the pneumatic-tube proposition that has gone out; and you will find as a rule that the man who is in favor of one will favor all three, and that they have formed a sort of inside combination for the purpose of overruling Congress and putting money into the pockets of these interested parties.

I am opposed to this proposition for two reasons. First, because it is fundamentally wrong. If you could prove that some of my constituents receive the mail a few hours earlier by this appropriation I would still oppose it, because I deny the right of any section of the country to receive special facilities at the expense of the entire country. Then I oppose it because it has not yet appeared to my satisfaction that it does any good.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in one part of Mississippi we have this subsidized line, running over from Birmingham, Ala., to Greenwood, Miss. In another part of the State we have the Illinois Central Railroad line. The subsidized line gives the poorer mail service, the slower rate of the two roads—that part of it which runs to Greenwood, Miss., from Birmingham, Ala., across the State.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Is that a part of the main line to New Orleans?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is a part of the subsidized road.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Is it a part of the main line from Washington to New Orleans?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; of course it is not. It is clear out of the way of New Orleans, but is a part of the subsidized lines. Now, then, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says, "we of the South here ought to stand up for what rightfully belongs to the South." I hope that we always shall. To stand up for what the South can rightfully demand is a totally different proposition to standing up for rights, privileges, and favors wrongfully lobbied for by the railroads. I do not see what the two things have to do with the other. Now, it is attempted to be shown that the basis of the real prosperity of the South was this railroad subsidy of $172,000 a year. That is a little too absurd a proposition for discussion. If the South is to have any real prosperity at all, it is to come from its best manhood, its womanhood, its industry, and intelligence. [Applause.]

Its prosperous condition is owing to the fact that it has brought the mills nearer to the cotton fields and is able to manufacture the heavy cotton goods that are imported into northern China and Korea at a cheaper rate than the world ever knew before and can undersell Great Britain and all the rest of the world. The delivery of the daily RECORD at the town of Tupelo an hour earlier will not affect the prosperity of the South, upon my honor, I believe, 10 cents' worth. The argument ex abuso will not do. Because there are other provisions in this bill that are wrong we ought not to let this special wrong go any further unrebuked. Yesterday you started well. You got the pneumatic-tube appropriation out of the bill; now get the other out, and destroy the combination as far as you can. Then I agree, even if my friend from Alabama or anyone else wants to go further and strike what I believe to be a partial job out of the ocean mail service, I will go with them and do that. Take each one as it comes up.

I heard a former colleague of mine four years ago make a demonstration satisfactory to my mind that this service did not really expedite the mail to any part of the South. But let that rest as it may, Mr. Chairman, I shall not go into all that question. The gentleman from Alabama admits, and it is very strong—the gentleman from Alabama himself admits—that if this appropriation is cut off this very train that carries this mail will still go on carrying the mail, as now. The admission is fatal to the entire argument, and nothing further need be cited except to cite that alone. That ought to settle the question of making this appropriation. One gentleman on the other side——

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman from Alabama does not seem to be present. You do not mean to misquote him, I know.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly not.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman said that the train would go on to Washington, but they could not make the connection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I listened to the gentleman very carefully, and he admitted that this train would still run; and if I am wrong in that, I will correct it in the RECORD. I listened to him very carefully.

Mr. BROMWELL. The train that connects with this train that leaves at 11.15 is a train that brings the mail from New York between midnight and 4 o'clock. It is entirely newspaper mail, and has but little mail that comes from New England.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A gentleman on the other side——

Mr. KLUTTZ. I beg to correct that statement. I live along the line of the Southern Railroad, in North Carolina, and I know that we get letter mail from New York.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to insist on the rule that gentlemen address the Chair and ask my permission to interrupt. A gentleman on the other side said the most astonishing fact was that objection should be raised to this appropriation by Southern men. Why, I hope we have not reached that stage yet in the decadence of the South that it is to be a remarkable or unusual thing that Southern men should object to anything that they consider wrong, even if it be a wrong profitable to the South herself. I believe that the greatness of the South in the past has been due to the fact that it has stood for fundamental principles, and if we have any glory in the Union—and sometimes I fear we have something like Ichabod, the day of our glory seems passing—if we have any glory in the Union it is in the Southern statesmanship, which has shown that the best aspiration of the South has never been that its statesmen should flicker from fundamental principles for the purpose of obtaining temporary advantages. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is our first opportunity to break up these things. We won the preliminary skirmish yesterday when we killed the pneumatic-tube job, and I hope we will go right on with the glorious work and go on to conquer throughout the whole time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in that connection, what do the railroads already get without any special subsidy? A great deal has been said about economy in the postal service of this country. There ought to be economy, not in the way of cutting off the reading matter of the people to an undue extent, not economy in the way of refusing the people in the rural districts the opportunity to get mail once or twice a week by free delivery, but economy where there is evident injustice. Now, what does the minority report of the committee say?

> We are satisfied that the main cause of the deficiency in the revenues of the Post-Office Department is largely due to cost of transportation allowed and paid to railroad companies on inland mails.
> These companies very properly secure the best terms they can from the Government to perform this service. We ought to pay them such price as will secure to them just and liberal profit commensurate with the risk and obligations assumed by them. We ought not to pay more than this. Your attention is called to the excessive pay for transportation of mails, not with the view of striking out this item of the appropriation bill, for that could not be properly done at this time under contract relations between the carriers and the Government, but that some action may be had by Congress before the beginning of another fiscal year.
> We pay an average, as shown by the Postmaster-General's report, for carrying the mails, of 8 cents per pound.
> The best estimate to be made from the proof on the hearings on this question is, that the actual expense to the transportation companies in carrying the mails is about 1 cent per pound, and that the express companies (which we are informed pay about 40 per cent of their earnings to railroad companies for hauling their cars) underbid the Government on second-class mail matter, and carry it at less than 1 cent per pound on hauls of less than 500 miles, and still make a profit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MOON. I will yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, I want to put in some other things in this connection. I want to read this further from a report of the minority:

FACTS OF GROSSLY EXCESSIVE PAY TO RAILROADS FOR HAULING UNITED STATES MAIL.

Fixed rate for haul of 200 pounds of mail, average distance, a mile (365 days)	$94.77
Commutation rate for haul of one passenger and baggage (365 days), average distance, a mile	2.07
Commutation rate for haul of 200 pounds first-class freight, average distance, a mile	1.37
Fixed rate for haul of 300,000 pounds of mail, average distance, a mile	7,317.00
Commutation rate for haul of 300,000 pounds of passengers and baggage (365 days), average mail distance, a mile	3,121.02
Commutation rate for haul of 300,000 pounds first-class freight, average mail distance, a mile	2,048.76
Annual revenues of a passenger car	10,528.00
Annual revenues of a mail car	15,586.00
Decline in freight rates since 1878 per cent	35
Decline in passenger rates since 1878 do	17½
Decline in mail rates since 1878	Nothing

Now, our own employees handle the mail, and the railroad has nothing to do with it except to furnish us the standing room for them and for the mail.

Now, a special committee of this House was appointed for the purpose of investigating this matter and making a report to this House. That committee has never made any report, but we all understand——

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow me? I have branded the statement the gentleman has just now repeated as false, and permit me to do it again. I mean that the reduction of the mail rates has been greater than passengers, and only 2 per cent less than freight rates during the same period.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have before me the minority report of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The gentleman brands the statement I have just read from that minority report as false.

Mr. LOUD. That is true; I have.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have nothing to do with the question of veracity between the gentleman and the fellow-members of the committee. I am well acquainted with the gentleman from California and have the highest regard for his veracity; but I hope the gentleman will not charge me with lèse-majesté or treason if I say that I have equal confidence in his fellow-members.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I will yield the gentleman one minute for the purpose of telling him that the quotation he has read was never taken from the Postal Commission at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I did not say that it was.

Mr. LOUD. Neither does it bear any truth upon its face. For the gentleman's information I will give him the reduction——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I shall ask an extension of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LOUD. Well, the gentleman's time has expired and he is talking in my time now. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I did not know that; I was yielded further time by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, one minute further, because I do not want any misapprehension. I have not quoted from the report of that commission at all. The gentleman misunderstood me. I spoke of the commission and was going on to say that it had not made any report, but it was publicly noised abroad that in general they had come to the conclusion that the main reason for a deficiency in the postal service was the too great amount of money paid for railway transportation. I will ask the gentleman from California if that is not true?

Mr. LOUD. The Postal Commission has come to no conclusion.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And made no report.

Mr. LOUD. It has not.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have read from the figures which I took to be true; and I shall continue to take them to be true, notwithstanding anything the gentleman from California may say, unless he first proves to me that his fellow-members of the committee have taken figures as official, and published them, which are not official.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will take one minute to put the accurate figures in beside the gentleman's figures. The passenger mileage has increased 224.65 during the period the gentleman mentioned; freight ton mileage has increased 313.01 per cent; mail ton mileage, 555.48 per cent. Passenger rates during the same period have decreased 21 per cent, freight rates have decreased 41 per cent, and the mail rate has decreased 39 per cent.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This report says there has been no decrease. I do not know what is the fact.

Mr. BELL. Will the gentleman from California allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOUD. Yes, sir; a short one.

Mr. BELL. Is it not a fact that the mail rate, if reduced, must be reduced by an act of Congress, and that no act of Congress has been passed since 1878?

Mr. LOUD. No. The very act which has been in existence since 1873 is reductive by its own operation and requires no further act of Congress. Just the same rule applies in this case as applies to the carrying of freight and passengers. The more business these companies do, the cheaper they perform it: the more mail a railroad carries, the less money it gets per pound.

I can not take up any more time on this question, because I have agreed to yield the balance of my time to gentlemen who want to support this measure. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

Mr. COWHERD. Did the gentleman say ten minutes?

Mr. LOUD. That is all I can yield the gentleman, as I find upon an examination of my list.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, this matter is one of great personal interest to me. It is one that the people I have the honor to represent believe to be vital to their welfare. I ask of this House at least the courtesy of a fair hearing.

Two gentlemen have arisen on this floor and said that this appropriation is fundamentally wrong. Yet one of those gentlemen was on a committee that brought in an appropriation for the distribution of a certain vaccine matter in order to help a particular class—a proper appropriation, in my opinion, yet how can the gentleman say it was not "fundamentally wrong?" Another gentleman favored an appropriation taking money out of the Treasury for a Government reservation, and others favor appropriations for building post-offices in towns where there are no United States courts or officers, and these are not "fundamentally wrong." I submit to this House that all these appropriations are more properly within the characterization of "fundamentally wrong" than an appropriation that facilitates the mail.

Gentlemen, what is our duty here with regard to appropriations? It is to distribute them in such a way as will best promote the general welfare. Is it not? We appropriate money to deepen our harbors—not because we want to help New Orleans or New York or Boston. I vote for such appropriations not because the people I represent do business with all those ports that receive aid, for with some of them they do no business. We support such appropriations in order to promote the general welfare. Now, I state here as a fact that never a dollar is expended under an act passed by the Congress of the United States that does so much to promote the general welfare as the money which is expended to improve the mail service of the United States.

Gentlemen say: "What difference does it make whether you get your mails once a week or twice a week, once a day or four or five times a day?" Why, gentlemen, you can no more return to the old method of getting mails once a day in the great business communities than you can go back to traveling up the Potomac by the canal that runs by the side of it. I say—and I believe no man can refute the statement—that if you stop the present method of receiving mail in the great cities and put them back to one delivery a day, or if you will even go back to where you were a generation ago and transport the mails over the railroads at the rate of 15 or 20 miles an hour, you will in six months bankrupt every great business organization in the United States.

I say, further, that this little $25,000 appropriation that we ask is paid for, in my opinion, every day in the year by the savings of the commercial men of the country who by reason thereof receive their mails twelve hours earlier and thereby save one full day on their discounts and interest at the banks. Talk about "subsidies!" Why, sir, every time you fight a fast mail you are working for the benefit of the banks and the telegraph companies. Every time you facilitate the mail service to the extent of one hour, you are taking something away from the interest that the banks have gathered from the people and the tolls that the telegraph companies have taken.

Gentlemen talk about "subsidies;" and almost every man who hears that cry, especially if he represents a district where there are no great cities, is inclined to "take to the woods" at once. I state here that every free rural delivery in the United States is "subsidized," in the sense that this is a subsidy.

My distinguished friend here from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who has used that word so frequently, is one of the best friends of such "subsidies." I honor him for it because I believe in the rural free delivery, but they are not self-sustaining. This rural mail delivery is "subsidized" by the Government in the sense in which he uses the word; they could not be carried on otherwise. Why, sir, the star routes of the United States are "subsidized." I venture to say that my distinguished friend has in his district dozens, aye, hundreds of post-offices, that are maintained for the benefit of his people by a "subsidy." Who pays that subsidy? The people of my city give their full and generous share. .

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Have you not free delivery in your city?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes, sir; and that city pays out of the receipts of local mails originating in the city and delivered to citizens of that city—never getting outside of it—every cent of the cost of its free delivery, and turns over in addition a large contribution to the general fund of the Post-Office Department. You can not charge that this is any tax upon the other sections of the country, for this service more than pays all its expenses, and there was turned in last year from the post-office of that city $432,213.86 to help take care of your free delivery and your subsidized post-offices. [Applause.]

And yet, Mr. Chairman, when we come to ask 5 per cent of this amount, not for the benefit of any railroad company, but for the great commercial interests of the people—commercial interests that are essential to a million and a half of our people—gentlemen rise on the floor of this House and cry out "Subsidy! subsidy!" when their districts draw $10 subsidy for every dollar that is asked here in this appropriation.

I have two letters here which I desire briefly to refer to and will publish in the RECORD. One of them is from a Democratic postmaster and the other by his successor, a Republican postmaster, of Kansas City, both of them bearing upon the same subject. I ask the attention of the House to them. The first writes:

KANSAS CITY POST OFFICE, OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER.
Kansas City, Jackson County, Mo., January 25, 1898.

Hon. W. S. COWHERD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In response to your request for information covering the value of the fast mail from here to Newton, Kans., leaving at 2.30 a. m. daily, will say this service accommodates over one and a half millions of people. This train overtakes, at Newton, the night train leaving here at 9.20 p. m. on the Santa Fe road. At Newton the regular train is split up, one train going to Galveston and the other into western Kansas. In addition to Kansas City mail, the fast mail train carries mail from Omaha and connections and also mails from the South, arriving after departure of regular night trains. The accompanying map will show country covered by the new service.

In addition to making connections of great value to the service in the West, this train facilitates the commercial mail of this city almost beyond calculations. The crush of mail in the evening for years has been such that it has been impossible to work it up for evening trains. As a result a great volume of mail was continually held here over night. In the morning, again, the collections were so heavy it has been impossible to work up morning collections of mail for morning trains. As a result part of the great volume of local mail has been delayed in office twelve hours because of former conditions.

Congress in providing money, and the Department officials in establishing this service, brought greatly needed relief. The schedule time of the train is over 42 miles per hour, total run being 204 miles, which is understood here to be the fastest in the Railway Mail Service. In establishing the service in the beginning of the fiscal year the Department arranged a midnight collection of mail in this city. In this way all local mail accumulating, together with incoming mail, is made ready for the early morning service.

The Newton train over the Santa Fe gives service twelve hours earlier to over half of Kansas, practically all of Oklahoma, the western part of the Indian Territory, and central Texas, to Galveston, making valuable connections in that State.

Very respectfully,

HOMER REED, Postmaster,
By C. SEIDLITZ, Assistant Postmaster.

Here is another letter from a Republican postmaster, a successor to the one I have just referred to. Both of these men are Government officials not working for any political end, but endeavoring to do for the people what is best for them and for the best interest of the service:

KANSAS CITY POST-OFFICE,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER,
Kansas City, Jackson County, Mo., January 21, 1899.

SIR: Yours of recent date concerning the value of fast mail west from here received. There can be no question as to its importance to the central West, the West, and South. On coming into office I found this service, and have no hesitation in saying that it has relieved the congested condition of the mails beyond calculation.

What is known as the western fast mail out of Kansas City leaves over the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe at 2.30 a. m., and at 7.10 a. m. overtakes the west bound train which leaves Kansas City at 9.40 p. m., 204 miles west, at Newton, Kans. At this point part of the train goes west and part to Galveston. The service throws mail from Omaha and the Northwest, from Memphis and the Southeast, into the West and Southwest at least twelve hours before time of delivery by former schedule.

In addition to mail accumulating at this point from other sections after the departure of the evening trains, the volume of local business is constantly increasing. The crush of local mail is beyond calculation and surpasses the ability of the Department to handle it. It is utterly impossible for the local office to collect and distribute the evening business in time to reach the early evening outgoing trains. Hence it is that for some years prior to the establishment of this service a great volume of the afternoon mail was delayed until next morning. Piling up on this comes the morning commercial mail, which was in consequence neglected, and this was held back from morning trains and was not disposed of until the departure of evening trains.

This congested condition of the mail service hampered the service and restricted the income from the same until relief was afforded by the establishment of improved facilities. The relief provided by Congress, and the execution of the same by the Department, has been of incalculable value to the postal service in this section. In this immediate vicinity it serves efficiently and well one and a half million people with important business mail, and this does not include many of the extensive Western and Southern connections.

The local and outside accumulation of mail at this point originally suggested and continues to demand the present railway mail service.

Very respectfully,

S. F. SCOTT, Postmaster.

HON. W. S. COWHERD,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

I hold also in my hand, Mr. Chairman, resolutions which were unanimously adopted by the Commercial Club of Kansas City on the 31st of January of last year. This club represents a larger business interest than any other club of the same character between St. Louis and San Francisco. It has no connection with politics in any sense of the word. It is simply a representative club of the business men of the city. It has no connection with the railroads in any way, but one object of its existence is to maintain a transportation bureau, whose business is to keep railroad rates at a reasonable figure, to keep down freight rates. I will insert the resolutions in full. They are as follows:

THE COMMERCIAL CLUB OF KANSAS CITY, EXCHANGE BUILDING,
Kansas City, Mo., February 3, 1899.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed are resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club at their meeting on January 31, 1899.

Yours, truly,

E. M. CLENDENING,
Secretary.

Resolutions unanimously adopted by the Commercial Club of Kansas City January 31, 1899.

Whereas the former action of Congress in providing improved mail facilities for the West and Southwest, thereby enabling the business men of Kansas, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, and Texas to receive their mail from all Eastern points from twelve to sixteen hours earlier, has been of the greatest benefit to all the business interests of the Southwest; and

Whereas this action of Congress has provided the means by which more than 1,500,000 people in Kansas, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, and Texas are directly reached; and

Whereas the former congested condition of all Western mails, caused by the unsatisfactory hours at which they were forwarded from Kansas City, has been relieved by the provision for an early mail from Kansas City west to Newton and its connections south and west: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Commercial Club of Kansas City takes this method of expressing its appreciation of the steps taken by Congress to improve the mail facilities in the Southwest and to respectfully petition that the present satisfactory conditions be maintained.

Resolved further, That the thanks of this club are extended to Senators and Representatives whose appreciation of the necessity for improved mail facilities in the West has resulted in the present conditions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me state briefly the conditions which confront us. I can not go fully into the matter, of course, in the very brief time allotted to me. Instead of this being an appropriation for the benefit of the railroads, as has been suggested here, when this appropriation was originally made we went to the railroad companies and asked them to put on this fast train, leaving at the hour and running at the speed necessary to serve the convenience of the public. We were informed that they could not do it at the price which was offered. The Santa Fe road at first refused absolutely to put on a train for this additional compensation.

After urging the Second Assistant Postmaster-General to establish the service, and, as I remember it, at his suggestion, the Santa Fe road was asked to make a bid for the service. They bid $50,000 annually more than the law allowed, and asserted that they could not undertake to run the train and to make the time required at a less rate. They claimed that they would lose money even at that. But the train was finally put on because the merchants of Kansas City, who furnished the road with its business, demanded it of them, and the road had to yield finally to their wishes. And yet gentlemen call this a "subsidy" for the railroad!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COWHERD. I would be very glad if the gentleman could allow me a few minutes longer.

Mr. LOUD. I find that I have two minutes which I can spare to the gentleman.

Mr. COWHERD. I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH] the other day coined a very happy phrase when he said that the Post-Office Department was the "clearing house of commerce." I agree with him in that regard. I want to say to the gentlemen here, who have been talking of the postal service and the expenditures therein, that it should be remembered also that that is the one governmental service that is practically, or very nearly, self-sustaining. It is the service that comes more directly in communication with the people than any other. You can vote appropriations for a hundred million dollars for a Navy. You appropriate still more for the Army, and yet you continually oppose improvements in this service which comes directly to the homes of the people and is for their benefit and convenience.

It is a service, as I have said, that practically pays for itself. It is a service that goes to every homestead in the land, and every man, woman, and child in the United States, all are interested in it, every day in the year; and I warn gentlemen now that you can not lay your heavy hands upon it and throttle it; you can not force the people to go back to the time of the old canals and the slow stage coaches for their mail service and sustain yourselves before your people. I say to you they will not stand for it. This service is dearer to their hearts than any and all others performed by the Government.

This service not only carries on the commerce of the country, but it carries up its standard of intelligence and education; and in behalf of a community that turned in more than $400,000 net revenue last year from its post-office, in behalf of a million and a half of people who received almost nothing from the Government except what they get through the postal service, I appeal to you to give us back this small proportion of the money we gave, in order that our commerce may be benefited, in order that our mails may be expedited, in order that we may stand at our own door or on equal footing with the great cities, our rivals, that lie to the East, and whose mail is expedited, as ours should be. [Applause.] [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUD. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has seen proper to quote the views of the minority. He did not read the preceding words of the statistics which he submitted, which I will read for the information of the House:

While the Postal Commission have not reported, yet the press credits their statistician, Professor Adams, as the author of a report, based on proofs taken before the commission on the question of transportation, which we quote, as follows—

And throughout that statement, based simply on "press reports," gentlemen submit to this House a body of statistics which the chairman of the committee [Mr. LOUD], familiar with the information contained in the official report, declares to be incorrect, and I trust when I make to this House that which the House gave me authority to submit yesterday, a statement pertaining to inland mail transportation, I will be able to prove that the deficiencies in the postal service are due to an entirely different cause.

I make this statement in view of the report of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, of a reweighing of the mails from October 3, to November 6, 1899, which shows the fact that the free mail transportation made on behalf of the Government under the law creates a deficiency of upward of $19,000,000 per annum.

In other words, if that great customer of the postal system, the Government, should pay the rates that you, I, and everyone else have to pay, the Government would have to pay upward of $19,000,000 in the way of postage for matter which it transmits free, according to the weighing of five months ago. I believe every one of the details contained in the statement quoted by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] can be refuted, and I shall endeavor to refute them in the main.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi rose.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me. I have not questioned his integrity of statement. I have simply questioned the authority of the statement which he quoted as being based on "general press reports," which words signify nothing.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This does not purport to be the general press. It purports to be a statement by Professor Adams.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is what the press says that Professor Adams has said.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Has not Professor Adams, the statistician of the commission, made any report?

Mr. BINGHAM. The allegation is simply on the part of the press that Professor Adams says so and so. Professor Adams does not say so and so.

Now, as to these special facilities: The Department takes before it the question, "How shall we transmit mail on a certain line or route between New York and New Orleans? Given at the same time a knowledge of how all the mails are transmitted, how can we by the use of this appropriation economically and efficiently facilitate this transportation?"

They do it in this way: The Post-Office Department makes up a schedule itself. It has the benefit of all the trains which run between these points, and it endeavors to ascertain where the service can be facilitated. I know of no better authority than the gentlemen along the line of the route as to the wisdom of Congress in making this appropriation, and the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. COWHERD] has gone into full details with reference to the route to Kansas City, and other gentlemen will go into details as to the general route to New Orleans. I accept their statement.

Now, why do we have 80 trains from New York to my city of Philadelphia, carrying the mails every twenty or thirty minutes during the twenty-four hours of the day? Why does the Department do that? First, because the law allows them to do it; second, because in my city of a million and a half, and in greater New York, where there are three millions and a half, there are a sum total of 5,000,000 people—greater than the population of any other State in the Union except the States of Pennsylvania and New York. Those two cities interchange their mails continuously, expeditiously, and frequently. Why? Because of the commercial and industrial requirements of the business of those two great centers—larger, I say, than any States of the Union save the two that I have indicated.

These requirements demand the immediate delivery of all their mail in order that their business may be healthy, strong, quick, and certain. They do that under the general statute. If there were a hundred trains running between here and Philadelphia and New York, it would under the law be within the power of the Department to carry mail on every one of those trains. These are the two cities, with Chicago and the several other great cities, that render you your revenues. I have stated before that I have no objection, for the convenience of the people in their mails, to giving fair facilities in any section. I have none whatever to rural free delivery. I say again, as I have stated before, that it should be graduated and limited by statute.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the people residing and enjoying mail facilities along the line of a railroad should be authority for this House to act, and if they come in good faith to us and say the business interests along the line need and require the service, that it is more expeditious than the general mail transportation, to my mind, and with my vote, not only upon this question but upon every other question that indicates expedition, it shall at all times be given, without regard to section or community. [Applause.]

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask how the time stands between the two sides?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has thirteen minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee has twenty-six.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman informed me he had only fourteen minutes. If the gentleman has twenty-six minutes, I think he ought to consume some of his time.

Mr. MOON. Will you use some of your time?

Mr. LOUD. I would rather the gentleman from Tennessee used some of his time, if he has twenty-six minutes. I think there must be some mistake, for the gentleman said that he had but fourteen minutes.

Mr. MOON. I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I ought perhaps to take the time of the House to add any further to what I said in the general debate on this subject. I made a statement in the general debate bearing on this particular phase of the bill, because I feared I might not have an opportunity to discuss it in the two hours that were to be specially devoted to it.

I want to call the attention of the House to just a few facts in connection with this subsidy during the ten minutes that I have now allowed. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee is going to be kind enough to give me the remainder of his time following the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who is going to talk next.

First of all I want to make this statement clear to the House that from the time the original grant was made of this original facility subsidy the Post-Office Department have absolutely refused in every instance to recommend their continuance. Let me quote to you from the report of the Postmaster-General for the last year, and the language is substantially the same in every report, running back for nearly ten years. He says:

> In submitting the estimates for several years past this office has declined to include the item of special facilities for reasons heretofore stated, but appropriations, however, have been made.

Then he gives a table showing how this subsidy has been expended. When I referred to this fact on the first day of the debate on this bill, one gentleman said, "How does it come, then, if Post-Office authorities refuse to recommend this appropriation; and how does it come when in their hearing before the commission that they think it does the general service of the country detriment rather than good, that they go ahead and expend this money, although by the terms of the bill it is placed within their discretion?"

The Assistant Postmaster-General, in reply to that very question, put to him by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], as stated in the general debate the other day, said:

> Although on its face it appears to be a discretionary power, yet when Congress, after full debate year after year, has put this provision in the bill and made this appropriation, the Post-Office authorities can not construe it otherwise than as indicating the wish of Congress that it shall be spent, and have understood it as mandatory.

Yet every utterance of the Assistant Postmaster-General, and the Postmaster-General, where he has made one, has been against the continuance of this subsidy. Now, I am not surprised that gentlemen who advocate this subsidy and who live largely along the line of these two railroads should be interested in keeping it in the bill. The influence of a great railroad corporation is known to every member of this House, not only the influence of the officers of the road, but the working force; and we all know——

Mr. COWHERD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BROMWELL. I do not wish to yield at this time, and perhaps after I have made my statement you will not find it necessary. The gentleman from Kansas City speaks in defense of the $25,000 subsidy given to the train that starts from his city and goes to Newton, Kans. I am not surprised at it. The appropriation was put into this bill by a gentleman in the same locality, from a district in Kansas through which the train runs, a member of the Post-Office Committee. He found $25,000 of the original appropriation not being used. He thought it was a shame that the Government should save that $25,000 and suggested that it be put on the line running to Newton, Kans. He failed to get it on the bill in the House, because a point of order was made against it. He went to the Senate, and there the gentleman succeeded in getting it on the bill. When the bill came back with that amendment from the Senate, the point of order could not be made against it, and it has stayed on the bill ever since. I do not wonder the gentleman wants it continued. It helps the Kansas City newspapers to get out into eastern Kansas, and that was the sole and the only reason why this appropriation was put on.

The inference that might be drawn from the arguments of the gentlemen favoring this subsidy is that it is the sole compensation that these roads get for carrying the mails; in other words, that they carry the mail from Kansas City to Newton for $25,000, and the system starting from New York to New Orleans gets only $170,000 for the mails they carry. Let me state to the gentleman that the total amount that is paid for carrying the mail on these subsidized roads from New York to Philadelphia is $391,000; from Philadelphia to Washington, $307,000, making a total on the Pennsylvania system of $698,000.

The Southern road gets $318,000 for carrying the mail from Washington to Danville Junction, and from Danville Junction to Atlanta, $304,000; or, in other words, the Southern Railroad gets $722,000.

The Atlanta road gets $325,000, the Western Railroad of Alabama gets $54,000, and the Louisville and Nashville gets $186,000, so that this system of roads, including the $171,000 they get by the way of subsidies, gets an amount in full of $1,716,320 for carrying these mails. This is exactly shown in the table which follows, taken from the Postmaster-General's Report for 1899:

No. of route.	From—	Distance.	Ordinary annual pay for transportation.	Payment for postal cars.	Subsidy.	Total.	Name of railroad.
		Miles.
109004	New York to Philadelphia	90.65	$310,255.97	$60,478.75	$11,331.25	$301,065.97	Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore.
113001	Philadelphia to Washington	137.43	252,865.70	37,793.25	17,178.75	307,837.70
114002	Washington to Danville Junction	238.20	231,563.74	57,168.00	29,775.00	318,506.74	Southern.
118013	Danville Junction to Atlanta	409.40	291,230.78	61,285.00	51,175.00	403,690.78
121003	Atlanta to West Point	86.29	35,930.29	8,620.00	10,775.00	55,325.29	Atlanta and West Point.
124001	West Point to Montgomery	85.72	34,446.58	8,563.00	10,703.75	53,713.33	Western Railway of Alabama.
124012	Montgomery to New Orleans	318.27	114,570.41	31,827.00	39,783.75	186,181.16	Louisville and Nashville.
	Total					1,716,320.97

Total length of subsidized lines, miles	1,365.78
Total subsidy	$170,722.50
Average subsidy per mile	125.00
Total compensation	1,716,320.97
Average compensation, nearly	1,257.00

Now, the great State of New York with its total mileage of 7,857 miles, nearly six times as great, gets only a little over two millions and a half for carrying all the mail over all the roads, or in other words, with a mileage six times as great as the entire length of this system, they get only one and a half times as much for carrying all the mails. The State of Pennsylvania with a total mileage of 7,038 miles, over five times as large as the length of this road, gets $30,000 a year less money than this system running through the Southern States. Illinois, with a total mileage of 10,316 miles, or seven and a half times as long as this system, gets one and a quarter as much money; and so I might go on and compare other States. Railroads greater in length, greater in extent, get only a very small amount comparatively, in some instances less than this system gets for carrying the mails. This system is being well paid for its service.

Now, a great deal has been said about the expedition and rapidity with which these trains are run. I want to say there are trains in this country making far greater speed which are not being paid any subsidies, trains making 50 miles an hour. On the New York Central and the Michigan Southern they average 38 miles an hour. I have selected a few roads at random. The distance from Washington to Charlotte is 380 miles. Train No. 35, the fast mail train, makes it in ten and a half hours, or about 36 miles an hour. Train No. 37 makes it in 35 miles an hour. I want to say that there are trains run over the Southern system that make faster time than the so-called fast mail train. Train 33 makes it in ten hours, or fifteen minutes less than the subsidized train. Train 31 makes the run in nine hours and forty minutes, or fifty minutes less than train 35, the subsidized train.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GAINES. Before the gentleman resumes his seat, I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LOUD. I have not the floor, Mr. Chairman, neither do I propose to take the floor on this amendment.

Mr. MOON. I will yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio wish to reserve the balance of the time?

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman in charge of the opposition [Mr. MOON] has given me the entire time left to him, which is sixteen minutes, as I understand, and I will reserve that until after the other side has finished.

Mr. LOUD. I understand the gentleman wishes to consume all of his time in closing. I will therefore yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, this matter should be treated entirely as a business proposition. There is an appropriation of $171,000 to facilitate the mail from New York to New Orleans. The only question for this House to determine is whether enough people are interested in it and whether the mail is sufficiently facilitated to justify the expenditure, and whether the facilities would be gotten if the appropriation did not exist. It seems to me this is the right way to determine this matter. Let us first determine the number of people interested in it. The people of New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas are interested in this; also the mail of Cuba and Porto Rico goes by this route. Thus between fifteen and twenty million people are interested—certainly a sufficient number.

Now, I want to say if they could get this mail, and as well and speedily, without this appropriation, there is not a member in this House who ought to vote for it. If it does not facilitate the mail, there is not a man who ought to vote for the appropriation, because it is not right, just, or proper. That is a fair proposition. Everybody will admit that, from the number of people interested, this is a small sum of money to appropriate if the mail is facilitated.

The best way to test that is to see what the time was before the appropriation was made and what the time has been since. Now, they say it has increased gradually since. I want to give you the time-table one month after the appropriation was made for this special facility and one month before. I have here a letter from Mr. Shallenberger, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, giving the schedule of trains before the appropriation was made and the schedule since. Take the town of Danville, Va., in my district. Formerly it took eighteen hours and fifteen minutes to take a letter from New York City to Danville.

Mr. GAINES. When was that?

Mr. SWANSON. That was the very month before the appropriation was made.

Mr. GAINES. What year?

Mr. SWANSON. That was in 1893. But immediately after the appropriation was made the time was reduced to thirteen hours twenty-five minutes. In other words, there was a saving of five hours in the commercial communication between Danville and New York—nearly all in one month—on account of this appropriation.

Take the town of Greensboro. It used to take nineteen hours and fifty-five minutes to carry a letter from New York to that town.

Mr. GAINES. How long does it take to go from here to Danville?

Mr. SWANSON. Leaving here at 11 o'clock, the train gets there about 5 p. m.

Mr. GAINES. Six hours.

Mr. SWANSON. That train makes, I think, only two stops in the State of Virginia.

Take Tampa, Fla. At Tampa is accumulated all the mail that goes to Porto Rico and to Cuba. It is shipped across from there. It used to take, according to the report of the Postmaster-General, fifty-five hours and thirty-five minutes for a letter to reach there; now it requires only forty hours and forty minutes—a saving of fifteen hours on all the Cuban mail and the Porto Rican mail, this expediting having been gained by this small appropriation of $171,000. The like reduction has been made all along the line. Now it is greatly reduced. At New Orleans, at Atlanta, at Danville, and all these places is accumulated the mail to be distributed to the other cities.

These are the only trains in the United States for which the Post-Office Department makes the schedules to facilitate mail, instead of permitting the roads to make for facilitating passengers. What is the effect of this in Virginia? I want to give you an illustration from my own State. This through mail train makes but two stops, I think, in the State of Virginia—one at Charlottesville and one at Lynchburg. The Department fixes the very minute that the train shall stop at Danville, the very minute that it shall stop at Lynchburg, the very minute that it shall stop at Atlanta. Thus the mail is expedited instead of the passenger business.

If you were the owner of a train running through Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina—running from New York to New Orleans—would you be willing that that train should do practically no local passenger business—stop at none of these smaller stations to take on passengers—without being paid for it? What does this railroad line do? It puts on local trains to pick up passengers from station to station. The Postmaster-General says that this third train has been put on from Washington to New Orleans to do the local passenger business so that the mails may be facilitated and expedited.

This appropriation is not for the benefit of a single road. By its terms it is intended to facilitate mail transportation from New York by way of Atlanta to New Orleans. There are three routes—one by the Seaboard Air Line and the other by the Atlantic Coast Line and the other by the Southern. Up to 1893 the Atlantic Coast Line had the contract under this appropriation. What did they do? In 1893 they came to the Post-Office Department and said: "We give up this contract voluntarily; we do not want it; we will not accept the appropriation and enter into the contract that you require of us to run our trains without stopping at these local stations."

The Department required that they should start a train from New York City at 4 o'clock in the morning. They said that under such an arrangement they would lose more upon the passenger traffic than they would make upon the mail transportation. That railroad line gave up this business voluntarily. As a result, the whole mail system of the South was demoralized, and the boards of trade in these cities finally induced the Southern Railway to consent to accept this appropriation and give this section this facility.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Why did the Government require a train to be started at 4 o'clock in the morning?

Mr. SWANSON. I will tell the gentleman. Under the general law governing this business the railroad company simply presents its schedule to the Department, and it puts the mails upon that line or not, as it pleases. But in the present case the railroad does not fix the schedule for this train; the Department fixes it. The Department says: "We will not pay you a cent unless you run on this schedule, the object of which is to facilitate mail transportation, not passenger traffic." And the Department fixes 4 in the morning in New York, because that is the best time for mail trains.

Mr. McCULLOCH. At what time would the train leave Little Rock?

Mr. SWANSON. It does not leave Little Rock, nor touch there. It leaves New York at 4 o'clock in the morning, as I have said.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Why should it not leave at 11 or 12 o'clock?

Mr. SWANSON. Because the Department, acquainted with all the mail connections, thinks that is the best time, and requires it.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Why should not the train leave earlier than 4 o'clock in the morning?

Mr. SWANSON. Because there is a fast through train leaving at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and a great deal of the mail business accumulates after that time. The whole New England mail does not come in until after that train leaves.

Mr. GILBERT. You say that one company gave up this contract voluntarily?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GILBERT. And this other company assumed the contract?

Mr. SWANSON. The Southern Railway assumed it, but the other company could take it at any time they were willing to do so without this extra compensation.

Mr. GILBERT. Was there any additional compensation provided for the company now operating this business?

Mr. SWANSON. Not a bit. They received exactly the same that was formerly given. The company is fined if it does not make the schedule. They forfeit pay for the trip.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I desire to ask a question for information. I am not a member of the committee, and I am open to argument on this subject; but I heard my friend from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] state here a few minutes ago that there are three or four trains making better time than these subsidized trains.

Mr. SWANSON. There is only one other train from New York to New Orleans, and there used to be only one before this appropriation was made. The train that did not get the appropriation was the one that existed before this appropriation was granted, running from New York to New Orleans by way of Atlanta.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Then the logical conclusion to be drawn from the gentleman's argument is that as a result of this subsidy, which I consider wrong in principle, the train runs faster.

Mr. SWANSON. Why, the train which used to take the place of this special fast train took eighteen hours and fifteen minutes to get the mail to Danville, the town in which I live. The Postmaster-General tells you that now it only takes thirteen hours and twenty-five minutes. It used to take fifty-five hours and thirty-five minutes to get the Cuban and Porto Rican mail to Tampa. Now it only takes forty hours and forty minutes, a saving of fifteen hours to Tampa. The mail of 15,000,000 people is concerned in this.

The gentleman says, "Why do you not give it to other sections of the country?" I will tell you why. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] tried to get special mail facilities from Cincinnati to Atlanta. I favored it, but it went out on a point of order. He did not oppose this at that time, but every hour and minute since he could not get his appropriation he has fought this. He did not have this great antagonism until then. Now, I have always said that where you can facilitate the mail, if the service is sufficient to pay for it, if the number of people interested are sufficient, you ought to do it.

The gentleman says the Postmaster-General does not recommend this. He does not say that it is not beneficial, but he says that there is complaint on the part of other people who do not get it. He admits in his letter that is filed here that it facilitates the mail to the extent that I have told you. Now, let me read you what he says on cross-examination. He says:

I am not prepared to say that it would not be disastrous if that train should be taken off and nothing substituted for it.

When Mr. Shallenberger was before this commission he stated distinctly that he could not say that the Southern people could get this same service if Congress refused to make this appropriation. He simply said at that time that it was a special facility to the Southern people and that he thought that it ought to be general, or else that we ought not to have it.

Now, the conditions down South are different from those in other parts of the country. As I have told you, it is a sparsely settled country. The travel between New York and New Orleans is not as great as the travel between New York and Chicago. Every twenty minutes a train goes out of New York for Chicago and out of Chicago for other points. There used to be only one train, before this appropriation was made, running between New York and New Orleans, and it goes through a stretch of country thousands of miles in length; and when you take the aggregate of the miles traveled, it is a small compensation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like five minutes more.

Mr. LOUD. We have no more time on this side, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GAINES. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. I should like to hear the gentleman's statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time in favor of this proposition is exhausted, under the order heretofore made.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman from California?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California is exhausted.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, when I ceased speaking a few minutes ago I was referring to some of the other trains in this country which are not subsidized, which make as good or better time than these subsidized trains, and I was also calling attention to the fact that this very Southern road has trains which are not subsidized that make faster time than those that are.

These figures are taken from the time tables. The distance from Washington to Atlanta is 648 miles. The time that train No. 35 makes is eighteen hours and forty minutes, or an average of 34.7 miles per hour, while train No. 37, which is not subsidized, makes, on an average, 36 miles an hour for that entire distance.

Illinois Central Railroad train No. 3 leaves Chicago at 5.30 in the afternoon and runs to Cairo, a distance of 365 miles, in nine hours and forty-five minutes, or an average rate of 37.4 miles an hour, and gets no subsidy. The same train runs the distance between Chicago and Memphis, 527 miles, in fifteen hours twenty-five minutes, or an average of 34.2 miles per hour, about the same rate that this Southern train, No. 35, makes. I want to remark right here that the gentleman from Virginia talks about the Southern trains running through a sparsely settled country. The Illinois Central train, between Chicago and New Orleans, runs through just about as sparsely settled a country as the Southern does. The distance from Chicago to New Orleans is 923 miles. The Illinois Central train makes this in twenty-six hours five minutes, or an average of 35 miles an hour, which is as good time as the Southern train makes, and it gets no subsidy for it.

If we take the entire subsidized line from New York to New Orleans, we have to count that train as leaving New York at 12.10 midnight. It is true that it waits in Washington for another train that leaves New York four hours later to reach it in Washington. But remember that that train that connects with No. 35 of the Southern brings out the mail from New York up to midnight, and leaves New York at 12.10, reaching Washington at 7 o'clock in the morning and lying here from 7 o'clock until 11.15 in the morning before it starts for the South. Yet that is given as a part of the subsidized system. That is the line that brings the passengers who go South over this Southern system. The train that leaves, not at 4 o'clock in the morning, but the one that leaves at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes at night is the train that brings the passenger travel.

Now, what does the 4.30 a. m. train bring? Nothing but the New York newspapers, or very little else. Gentlemen will say that it brings the New England mails. The New England mails come in just as much in the daytime as between 12 o'clock at night and 4 o'clock in the morning. There is no one train that necessarily expedites the New England mail. It depends entirely on the running of the New England trains themselves whether they get the benefit of this part of the service or not.

Now, the Santa Fe train from Chicago to Kansas City, No. 17, runs a distance of 458 miles in eleven hours and a half, or an average of nearly 40 miles an hour, and yet that train is not subsidized.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BROMWELL. Not now. You will have your opportunity in the five-minute debate, and then I will answer your question.

Mr. COWHERD. I understand there is to be no five-minute debate on this.

Mr. BROMWELL. Yes; there is. The Burlington road runs a train from Chicago to Kansas City, a distance of 500 miles, in thirteen hours and fifty minutes, or an average of 36 miles an hour. The Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern train, running from Parkersburg to St. Louis, 537 miles, makes an average of 34 miles an hour, or the same as the Southern train, and yet it gets no subsidy. The Big Four road, running from Cleveland to St. Louis, a distance of 548 miles, averages 36 miles an hour, and gets no subsidy.

In other words, gentlemen, the pretense that this is a specially fast train, and is therefore entitled to the subsidy, is shown by these facts to be entirely without foundation, and you can get these figures for yourselves by looking at the Railroad Gazetteer. There are plenty more which show the same state of affairs.

But gentlemen say that this train leaves New York City at such an hour that it does not get any passenger travel. It leaves at 4 o'clock in the morning, and goes on through. As I have said to you, the passenger travel that goes over the Southern from New York goes on the train that leaves New York at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes at night, not the 4 o'clock train in the morning, and all that that train does is to hurry the New York newspapers over here to overtake that train that leaves at 12.10 at night, which lies over from 7 o'clock until 11 o'clock in the morning, when it is sent on.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just a few general remarks. We are being met, and particularly in this bill, with demands from all parts of the postal service for all sorts of extensions and improvements. The members of the House on both sides are demanding not merely $1,750,000 for free rural delivery but $2,000,000; and it will grow, I firmly believe, to ten or fifteen or twenty million dollars, if allowed, in this House inside the next two years. If the service is right, let it grow. We are called upon by the railway mail clerks, clerks in post-offices, and carriers of the country to reclassify them.

The chairman of the Post-Office Committee has said that if these classification bills were passed it would amount to $6,000,000 out of the revenues of the Government. If they are entitled to reclassification and increase of salaries, I say let them have it. They have my sympathy; but we can never do justice to them, we can never do justice to your districts or free rural delivery or any other improvements, if we shall lavishly and foolishly use the money of the Government as is done on this subsidy to give such service as that.

Gentlemen also say there is danger of this fast train being taken off if we do not give them this subsidy. I do not believe it for one moment. The great Southern Railroad, reorganized, and doing a profitable business, having the most important trunk line, perhaps, from New England and the Middle States to the Southwest, is not going to take off any one of its good trains merely because the Government pays $170,000 less for carrying the mails. That train will run on the same schedule time, and will deliver the mails that it carries on the same time to every point in the South without that subsidy that it will with it. That is nothing but a bugbear and bugaboo that gentlemen hold up before us, trying to frighten us by saying that it will lose five or six hours in the time of delivery.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman tell us whether there is any proof in this record that this train would be taken off if this subsidy is not given?

Mr. BROMWELL. On the contrary, the Postmaster-General, while he said that he did not know—no man could know what is coming to pass—said that he believed the Government would get as good service by making arrangements with competing roads, if not better.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Did he not say he could give it to this road or any road that will carry it?

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman has his answer. The same question was put by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] to the Postmaster-General in the hearing before the commission. He said, "If this is in your discretion, Mr. Postmaster-General, why can not you discontinue it," and the Postmaster-General said:

So long as Congress appropriated for it and so long as Congress authorizes me to expend the money, why, of course, we look upon it as an order to do so.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the gentleman permit me to read what the Postmaster-General stated?

Mr. BROMWELL. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. SWANSON. I have here what the Postmaster-General did say.

Mr. BROMWELL. But I say to the gentleman from Virginia and to the members of this House I know what the Postmaster-General said. I have looked over it; I have read it over carefully. I know the gentleman can pick out a sentence or a part of a sentence which may appear to favor it, but the conclusion of what he said was this subsidy not only does no good to the service, but, in his opinion, it is a great injury and detriment to the service.

Mr. SWANSON. I have some places here where he says it will be a benefit to the service.

Mr. BROMWELL. You will have your five minutes to show that. The gentleman well knows he can take here and there a part of a sentence—and he has marked them—in his copy of the book; I saw them—little expressions, half sentences, and sentences which appear to give a favorable view to his side of this question; but I say to him and to you or to any person that, when brought back to the proposition on this subsidy, the Assistant Postmaster-General has said it was for the detriment and not for the benefit of the service of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have here the Railroad Gazetteer for 1893, before this great combination of roads was made. I find in the time-table for 1893 a train leaving New York at about the same hour that this 12.10 train leaves now, or rather leaving Washington at 11.10, which got to Atlanta in a little less time than is allowed since this train under the subsidy. That was in 1893. Gentlemen can find it right here in the Railroad Gazetteer. It is very natural to find some gentleman here living along the line of these roads defending this subsidy. It is natural that they should. The influence of great railroad corporations naturally influences all of us.

I want to say that this question of the extension of the railroad facilities—of the amount that is paid for the transportation of mail—would not create so much of discussion and it would be settled if these railroads themselves would come to Congress and say they were satisfied with the regular mail pay that they get under the laws of Congress. We do not want the subsidy; we think we get sufficient compensation for carrying these mails, and I do not know the reason why these two lines of railroad should be picked out and made favorites by Congress.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the gentleman state why it was that he attempted to get a subsidy for a railroad in his district?

Mr. BROMWELL. I will. The Chamber of Commerce of my city, when I first became a member, saw that these two lines were getting subsidies, and they thought it would be a good thing to have the Cincinnati and Southern subsidized for a fast mail between Cincinnati and Chattanooga, and I tried to get it, but found I could not. I found, when I came to investigate it as a member of the Post-Office Committee, that I ought not to get it, and I never tried for it afterwards. I went to work and tried to make this thing as obnoxious as possible by proposing subsidies for every railroad that ran out of Cincinnati. I wanted them to subsidize the Baltimore and Ohio, the Chesapeake and Ohio, the Big Four, the Pennsylvania, and Southern, just to show the absurdity of the proposition. I know the gentleman from Virginia has come in here whenever this question has been up and said: "The gentleman from Ohio wanted a subsidy for his railroad." Of course I did, but I have learned wisdom since I have been a member of this House and learned to be honest about these subsidies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from New York and Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, $171,238.75: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that paragraph last read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out the last paragraph.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LITTLE) there were—ayes 41, noes 92.

So the motion to strike out the paragraph was not agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For continuing necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Kansas City, Mo., to Newton, Kans., $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph just read.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LITTLE) there were—ayes 32, noes 85.

So the motion to strike out the paragraph was not agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For miscellaneous items, including railway guides, city directories, and other books and periodicals necessary in connection with mail transportation, $1,000.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Post-Office Committee a little while ago asserted most earnestly and vehemently that we had been reducing constantly the charges for carrying the mail. Now, I say with all due deference to him that there is not a shadow of foundation for that statement.

The law is so fixed that if a railroad company carries a small weight of mail, one price is fixed; if it carries a larger amount of mail, a cheaper price is fixed, just as the railroads carry carload rates cheaper than 100-pound rates. Now, the same rate has been in force for many years. The act of 1873 fixed the rate at so much for 200 pounds, so much for a thousand pounds, and so much for 5,000 pounds, etc., right along, as it is to-day.

In 1876, notwithstanding the arrangement was just as it is to-day, Congress reduced the general rate 10 per cent by a horizontal cut. Matters standing in the same way as they do to-day, Congress in 1878 made another horizontal cut of 5 per cent; and since 1878 Congress has not taken any action at all. The railroad has been reducing both the hundred-pound and the carload rate to the people, but nothing to the Government.

I say it is absolutely misleading to this House and to the country for the chairman of that committee to come here in the face of such facts and tell us there has been a reduction. He might as well have said, because the mail has increased in weight between 1873 and 1876, that there was a reduction beyond 10 per cent. Nobody has ever claimed that.

The weight of the mail was increasing from 1873 to 1876, yet in 1876 Congress passed an act providing that these rates fixed by the act of 1873 should be reduced by a horizontal cut of 10 per cent. The gentleman could well say that on the increase from 1876 to 1879 there was a reduction, because as a road carries more weight the price is less. But in 1878 Congress reduced the rate 5 per cent, and there has not been any reduction since 1878. I have the statute here before me, but the law is so plain that it is unnecessary for me to read it.

The gentleman hangs his statement simply upon the little technicality that the law itself says if a railroad carries only 200 pounds a day it shall have a certain price, and if it carries 5,000 pounds it shall have a less price for carrying by wholesale than for a little job lot. On that little technicality—a thing which existed from 1873 up to 1878, during which period we had two reductions, the chairman seeks to put before this House and the country the statement that the reduction has been 42 per cent since that time. I assert it has not been; that the gentleman's statement is false information based upon a technicality. Every tendency of railroads has been to lower the hundred-pound and the car rate to individuals, but no reduction has been made to the Government in twenty-one years.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, there is no gentleman on the floor of this House for whom I have a higher personal regard than the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL]. But I want to say that in this case he has built up a man of straw for the purpose of pounding him.

If the gentleman will repeat the words that I used, he will find that his speech was wholly unnecessary. It seems almost impossible to get the gentleman to understand what I say. Probably it is because I have not a clear manner of stating a question. I have stated, and will now state again to the gentleman, that I was giving the reduction of the rate per ton per mile on freight. I can not carry the direct figures in my mind now, but I think it was 41 per cent. The reduction in the mileage of passengers I think was 21 or 22, and the reduction in the ton miles of mail, as I stated, was 39 per cent. I hope the gentleman understands that. I also gave a statement of the increase amount of business, and while the increase amount of freight mileage has been about 331 per cent, the increase weight of mail had increased 555 per cent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope we may have a vote.

Mr. BELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LOUD. I do not want to go any further on this question. My statement is in the RECORD, and I repeat it again here.

Mr. BELL. But the House will never understand it. Your increase was not under any of the legal weights of the Government.

Mr. LOUD. I made the statement emphatic, and now will make it again. The gentleman will find my statement to-morrow morning in the RECORD. I said the act itself was self-reductive.

Mr. BELL. Yes, I know you did; but I say it is not.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I say it is. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For transportation of foreign mails, $2,248,000, including additional compensation to the Oceanic Steamship Company for transporting the mails by its steamers sailing from San Francisco to New Zealand and New South Wales by way of Honolulu, all mails made up in the United States destined for the Hawaiian Islands, the Australian colonies, New Caledonia, and the islands in the Pacific Ocean, $80,000: Provided, That the sum paid said Oceanic Steamship Company shall not exceed $2 per mile, as authorized by act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce:" And provided further, That hereafter the Postmaster-General shall be authorized to expend such sums as may be necessary, not exceeding $55,000, to cover one-half of the cost of transportation, compensation, and expense of clerks to be employed in assorting and pouching mails in transit on steamships between the United States and other postal administrations in the International Postal Union; and not exceeding $40,000 for transferring the foreign mail from incoming steamships in New York Bay to the several steamship and railway piers, and between the steamship piers in New York City and Jersey City and the post-office and railroad stations, and for transferring the foreign mail from incoming steamships in San Francisco Bay to the piers.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have received dispatches from New York requesting me to have read to the House the petition which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, April 26, 1900.

Hon. EUGENE F. LOUD, Washington, D. C.:

The Merchants' Association respectfully petitions Congress to reconsider its decision striking the item for pneumatic-tube service from the Post-Office appropriation bill. The following reasons are believed entitled to consideration:

First. There is no specific charge of bribery or corruption in connection with this matter. General charges should not be recognized.

Second. New York City is not simply a local post-office; it is the clearing house of the entire country for both incoming and outgoing foreign mails.

Third. New York received not one dollar extra appropriation for the service it renders the different trade centers of the country in doing this work.

Fourth. New York returned last year in excess of expenditure, $5,578,933.39.

Fifth. The present facilities for handling the mails, both local and foreign, are utterly inadequate for the business done. This country has made rapid strides in the past few years. Manufacturing industries have sprung up throughout the entire length and breadth of the land, and the great middle West is now the center of manufacture. The markets of the world are calling for our manufactured goods. Every facility should be given the clearing house for foreign mails. A few minutes' delay frequently means a loss of from one to five days' time. First-class mail earns a large revenue for the Government. The barnacles attached to the service cause a deficiency and should be removed.

This is an age of trade and commerce, and every improvement in the postal service should be adopted, no matter whether controlled by private individuals, corporations, or the Government. The city of New York locally can take care of itself with the present appropriation, but to be the effective clearing house of the entire country for foreign mails it should have every facility that human ingenuity can devise and money obtain, and not be hampered by either prejudice or parsimony. Every encouragement should be given to our manufacturing industries as they seek the markets of the world.

THE MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK,
By S. C. MEAD, Assistant Secretary.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PAYNE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 4324. An act to correct the military record of Albert S. Austin;

S. 3189. An act for the relief of Leonard I. Brownson;

S. 2960. An act for the relief of Edward Kershner;

S. 906. An act to provide an American register for the steamer Esther, of New Orleans; and

S. 276. An act for the erection of a public building at Kingston, N. Y.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9824) authorizing the Secretary of War to make regulations governing the running of loose logs, steamboats, and rafts on certain rivers and streams, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. NELSON, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. BERRY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 10538) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following; resolution in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of The Smithsonian Institution—Documents Relative to Its Origin and History, 7,000 copies, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

For manufacture of adhesive postage and special-delivery stamps, $223,000: Provided, That out of the revenue arising from special-delivery business the Postmaster-General may allow expenditures by postmasters at first-class post-offices, under regulations to be established by him, for car fare for special-delivery messengers in emergent cases where immediate delivery in the usual way is impracticable, not to exceed in the aggregate, for all offices, $10,000 a year: And provided further, That at first and second class post-offices the Postmaster-General may establish rules under which special delivery may be effected by any salaried clerk or employee thereof, and the lawful special-delivery fees allowed therefor, the same as is now done at third-class offices, in cases where such delivery can not be made by regular messengers.

Mr. DRIGGS. I should like an explanation of the "Provided further." Is that the same as in the last bill?

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, several gentlemen about me have suggested, in view of what was said a moment ago, that it would be entirely proper for some member of the House upon this side to say that Mr. Dockery, during the sixteen years of his service here, secured the confidence and respect of all members upon this side of the House. Nobody believes that he would be guilty of any offense, or any official impropriety, and certainly not of a crime. I want to say for myself, having known him intimately, he being my neighbor, seeing him in Congress and out of Congress, that I have the utmost confidence in him, the greatest respect for him, and I know of no member whose departure from this House was more universally regretted than that of Mr. Dockery. [Applause.]

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, in order to protect my rights, I offer the following amendment at the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following:
"And that the sum of $20,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be made available on the taking effect of this act, to maintain the postal service in Porto Rico during the months of May and June in the year 1900.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment here in order to protect my rights, but if I can get the unanimous consent of the House to offer it at another point in the bill, I do not desire to offer it here. I will ask unanimous consent to refer to page 2, and to offer it in a more appropriate place, and then I will state to the House the necessity for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to recur to page 2, for the purpose of offering an amendment which the Clerk will report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOUD. Then I will offer this amendment and withdraw the other. They are both substantially the same.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment first offered will be withdrawn, and the gentleman from California substitutes the following, which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "dollars," page 2, line 2, the following:
"Provided, That the sum of $20,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of this appropriation to maintain the postal service in Porto Rico during the months of May and June in the year 1900, to be immediately available."

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, the Postmaster-General finds that this act that we have recently passed, which goes into effect on the 1st of May, turns the postal revenues of Porto Rico into the public Treasury, and that he would have no means of running the postal service in Porto Rico without a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. BELL. Is it the intention that this shall be at the expense of Porto Rico?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, no; let me say that when this act goes into effect Porto Rico, so far as the postal service is concerned, will become a part of the postal service of the United States.

Mr. BELL. Then, does this come out of our revenues, or out of the revenues of Porto Rico?

Mr. LOUD. I suppose that hereafter if the revenue of the postal service of Porto Rico are not sufficient to pay the running expenses of the offices there, we will have to pay the difference out of the Treasury, or out of the receipts of the postal service in the United States, just the same as we do in many portions of the United States to-day.

The amendment of Mr. LOUD was agreed to.

Mr. LOUD. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I wish the gentleman would yield for a moment.

Mr. LOUD. I yield for a moment.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has just been recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desire to make a request for unanimous consent of the House, and ask the attention of the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill to this request. I will premise by saying that when the committee was considering the subject of rural free delivery the other day, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER] presented an amendment providing for an appropriation of $2,000,000 for this service. It was withdrawn subsequently, largely upon the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS], who said that the rural free-delivery department had informed him that the amount granted by the committee and appropriated by this bill, $1,750,000, was all that they could use in that service. But it turns out that that statement was made to him some time ago, and relating to that time was correct, but since then members of Congress have sent so many petitions for this service to the Department that those in charge now inform us that it could usefully, profitably, and judiciously handle $2,000,000 for rural free delivery. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER] was correct in his statement when he stated these facts on presenting and urging a total appropriation of $2,000,000. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 13, lines 12 to 15, for the purpose of offering an amendment in consonance with the wishes of the rural free-delivery department, my own judgment, and, I think, the sentiment of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to recur to page 13 for the purpose of offering an amendment relating to rural free delivery. Is there objection?

Mr. LOUD. I object.

Of course I should not have withdrawn the motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman from New York seems to want some time, but I will not yield the floor for any further request or amendment.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman had the floor, but was cut off the other time.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I move to strike out the last two words of the paragraph. I think the gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman does not propose to offer any amendment.

Mr. CUMMINGS. No; I do not.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I want to be recognized after the gentleman.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, the discussion yesterday developed the fact that the provision which practically amended the eight-hour law so far as the letter carriers are concerned was offered here, not by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, but by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], acting individually. If this fact had been known at that time, it is possible that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] might have made the point of order against it. I want to say, further, Mr. Chairman, that when I asserted yesterday that no letter carrier could be produced who favored the amendment to the bill, and added that no hearing had been allowed them before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, I understood the gentleman to say that such a hearing had been given and had been printed. It seems, however, that it was a hearing before the postal commission and not before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I shall insist upon a yea-and-nay vote upon the Loud amendment in the House.

I want to say further, Mr. Chairman, that in replying to me yesterday the gentleman from California made a statement that there was a general scramble all along the line for an increase of salaries, and among others he instanced the fourth-class postmasters. Now, Mr. Chairman, while that may appear to be an increase of salary, it is really not so. The fourth-class postmasters came into being many years before the establishment of the railway post-offices, and the mailing of letters in this railway mail has decreased the pay of the fourth-class postmasters. They are simply asking to-day that the Government shall stop this robbery of them, which has been going on ever since the beginning of the Railway Mail Service.

The cancellation of stamps in the offices and the sale of the stamps in the same offices show that every quarter there is over $100,000 decrease, and as the fourth-class postmasters are paid according to cancellation, and not according to the sale of stamps, their revenues are thereby decreased, so that it amounts to-day to over $300,000 a quarter. They simply ask that the Government shall stop this robbery of them. Now, there was an implied contract made with the fourth-class postmasters when they were first appointed that their allowance should be based on the stamps canceled in their offices. Since then the Railway Mail Service has come between them and taken a part of their receipts. It is a traveling post-office, robbing them of a large percentage of what belongs to them.

We have 70,000 fourth-class postmasters, and in some cases they receive no more than $7 a year, furnishing their own lights, fuel, wrapping paper, twine, messengers, etc., at their own expense, and selling all the stamps absolutely free of cost to the Government. Of these fourth-class postmasters 21,130 receive less than $50 per annum, 16,838, less than $100 per annum; 14,570, less than $200 per annum; 12,770, less than $500 per annum; 5,079, less than $1,000 per annum. They do not ask for the return of the money that has been taken from them, but they do insist that hereafter the railroad robbery shall cease.

Mr. LOUD. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of privilege.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10301, and instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. LOUD. I ask for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. To a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. Speaker, I claim that there has been an injustice——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The question of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that the gentleman from California, the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, made an agreement here yesterday in the presence of the House, before the bill was through its consideration in Committee of the Whole House, to recur to the paragraph which repeals the eight-hour law, so that the point of order could be made against it; and, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I allowed that provision to be voted on here, and had I understood the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads that this agreement——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend. No such matter has been referred from the Committee to the House, and the gentleman will readily see that the Chair can take no cognizance of any matter except it takes place in the House. The gentleman from California moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask for a separate vote on one of the amendments——

The SPEAKER. That is not the question now before the House. The question is on ordering the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded on the amendments?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask a separate vote on the amendment that was adopted at the end of line 25, page 12.

The SPEAKER. If there is no other separate vote demanded, a vote will be taken on all the amendments except the one referred to by the gentleman from New York.

All the amendments except the one referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] were then agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment referred to by the gentleman from New York, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 25, page 12, add "Provided, That letter carriers may be required to work not exceeding forty-eight hours during the six days of each week, and such number of hours on Sundays as may be required by the needs of the service. And if a legal holiday shall occur on any working day the service performed on said day shall be counted as eight hours, without regard to the time actually employed. If any letter carrier is employed for a greater number of hours than forty-eight during the working days in any week, he shall be paid extra for the same in proportion to the salary fixed by law."

Mr. CUMMINGS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon that amendment.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. Twenty-four gentlemen rising. There has been no vote by which it can be determined whether 24 is a sufficient number, and the Chair will ask the other side to rise. [After counting the other side.] One hundred and eleven rising, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CUMMINGS) there were—ayes 74, noes 53.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

The question of ordering tellers was taken.

The SPEAKER. Twenty-eight gentlemen rising, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of no quorum?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do.

The SPEAKER (after counting). One hundred and ninety-one; and a quorum is present.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to demand the yeas and nays again?

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been refused by the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were refused?

Mr. PAYNE. Why, Mr. Speaker, we have had two votes since then.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I am asking a question of the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to ask for tellers?

The SPEAKER. It would not, but the Chair is decidedly of opinion that the motion to reconsider is in order, and therefore the Chair will put the question to the House. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes had it, and that the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill, and upon that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves to recommit the bill, and upon that motion demands the previous question.

The question of ordering the previous question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LITTLE) there were—ayes 134, noes 23.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTLE. Is it in order to move to recommit the bill with an amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not, after the previous question has been ordered.

The question on the motion of Mr. SWANSON to recommit the bill was taken; and the motion was lost.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. LOUD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GARDNER of Michigan, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MCPHERSON, for two days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. R. 10. Providing for the printing of 3,000 copies of House Document No. 141, relating to the preliminary examination of reservoir sites in Wyoming and Colorado.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4324. An act to correct the military record of Albert S. Austin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3189. An act for the relief of Leonard I. Brownson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2960. An act for the relief of Edward Kershner—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 906. An act to provide an American register for the steamer Esther, of New Orleans—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 276. An act for the erection of a public building at Kingston, N. Y.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Senate concurrent resolution 49:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of "The Smithsonian Institution: Documents Relative to its Origin and History," 7,000 copies, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution—

to the Committee on Printing.

TWELFTH AND SUBSEQUENT CENSUSES.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], from the Select Committee on the Census, calls up for consideration the bill which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10696) relating to the Twelfth and subsequent censuses, and giving the Director thereof additional power and authority in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the power and authority conferred upon the Director of the Census by an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1899, said Director of the Census shall have power, and is hereby authorized, to appoint and employ, as the necessity therefor may arise, one superintendent of printing, at an annual salary of $2,500, and to appoint and employ such number of skilled mechanics and other persons in the Census printing office as may be necessary to carry into effect the printing and binding provided for in said act, at the same compensation as is paid for similar work in the Government Printing Office.

SEC. 2. That the chief clerk of the Census Office shall act as superintendent, and have general charge of all buildings occupied for the purpose of carrying on the work of the census, and shall receive therefor the sum of $300, in addition to his regular salary.

SEC. 3. That the salary of the Director of the Census shall be $7,500 per annum.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 2 of page 2, before the word "printing," insert "preliminary."

Add the following as a new section:

"SEC. 4. That in addition to the sum provided to be paid to supervisors of census in section 11 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses,' approved March 3, 1899, the Director of the Census is hereby authorized and directed to pay to each supervisor, as further compensation, a sum equal to 2 per cent of the amount paid to the enumerators for taking the census in said supervisor's district."

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is reported——

Mr. McRAE. I make the point of order that the bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McRAE. That does not mean anything unless we are to have the right of amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask, then, that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, with the privilege of amendment.

Mr. McRAE. The previous question may be called in the manner of which we have just had an example.

Mr. HOPKINS. There is nothing in the bill to which the gentleman will object.

Mr. McRAE. I do not know about that.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. KLUTTZ. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that this is a unanimous report from the Committee on the Census.

Mr. McRAE. In view of that statement, I withdraw my point.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is composed of four sections. The first relates to changes in the character of the employment of the printing department of the Census Bureau. Under the law at the present time the Director of the Census is required to hire mechanics by the month as clerks. This bill provides that he may hire such employees in the same manner as is now done at the Government Printing Office, and with the same compensation. This change entails no expense upon the Government; in fact, it is an economical arrangement. This provision of the bill has been examined by the Government Printer as well as by the Director of the Census, and is satisfactory to all interested.

The second section provides that the chief clerk of the Census Bureau shall act as superintendent of the building, and shall have for such service additional compensation to the amount of $300. The building which was provided for a large part of the work of the census has been found insufficient, and two buildings will be necessary for carrying out the work of the Census Bureau. The compensation proposed to be paid here is practically the same as is paid in all the other Departments. The superintendent of the Treasury Department gets a salary of $3,000, and for similar service in the Interior Department and in the Department of Justice an extra compensation of $250 is paid.

The third section provides for an increase of the salary of the Director of the Census. Under the opinion of the Attorney-General this Bureau is practically an independent bureau. The Director of the Census is responsible for the disbursement of more than $9,000,000 and has charge of the entire work of the Bureau, including the employment of more than 3,000 persons. After looking the matter over carefully it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that an increase of $1,500 in the present salary would be only adequate in view of the service which he is rendering the Government.

Mr. CURTIS. Allow me to ask what the appointment clerk is paid now.

Mr. HOPKINS. Two thousand dollars.

Mr. CURTIS. What is the objection to paying him the same amount that is paid to the appointment clerks in the other Departments?

Mr. HOPKINS. The amount which we have put in here was recommended by the Director; we did not go above his recommendation.

The fourth section was prepared in the committee; it is a committee amendment.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I did not catch distinctly the reading of the bill nor the gentleman's explanation. I should like to know whether this bill takes from the Public Printer the control of the printing and gives it the Director of the Census.

Mr. HOPKINS. Not at all. This relates simply to the preliminary printing provided for in the original act and has been provided for in all previous censuses. The provision has been examined at the Government Printing Office and is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I should like to ask one question. I observe that section 4 provides for increasing the salaries of supervisors of census throughout the United States. I should like to know what that will amount to.

Mr. HOPKINS. I was just about to call the attention of the House to that amendment.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. What does it amount to?

Mr. HOPKINS. It amounts to about seventy-five thousand or seventy-six thousand dollars in all, and the reason that that was prepared and recommended by the committee is that members of the committee and the Director of the Census have received a large number of letters from various supervisors, insisting that the amount of work they have to do is such that the salary proposed in the original act is entirely inadequate and that they will lose money by going on with this service, and many of them desire to go out of the service if no extra compensation can be paid.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will the gentleman tell us how the salaries of supervisors of the Twelfth Census compare with the salaries of supervisors of the Eleventh Census?

Mr. HOPKINS. The salary as provided for here is something larger than it was in previous censuses, but in the taking of the Twelfth Census the supervisors are fewer in number and the amount of work imposed upon them is double or more than double that imposed upon the supervisors in the taking of the Eleventh Census in this, that their appointments have been made on an average more than six months prior to the corresponding appointments of the supervisors for the taking of the Eleventh Census, and they have been set to work at once by the Director to prepare their districts.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Is it not a fact that the duties of the supervisors thus far consist almost entirely in the selection of enumerators and the allotment of districts to the enumerators?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the gentleman that each supervisor, under the arrangement by which the Twelfth Census is to be taken, will have an average work of from ten to eighteen months, and one reason why more work is imposed upon them is that in previous censuses the supervisor selected his own enumerators, without any trouble at all; but in order to insure an efficient census and to insure the best ability the present Director has required that blanks be sent out from the main office to the supervisors, and that every person in the supervisor's district desiring appointment as an enumerator must make a written application setting forth his qualifications for the office, and that must be passed upon by the supervisor and sent to the Director to look over and see for himself and then sent back to the supervisors.

A MEMBER. It amounts to an examination.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There is a test schedule.

Mr. HOPKINS. And in addition to that, a test schedule has been made in order to secure the highest efficiency.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. While the gentleman is on that subject, will he state to the House what will be the greatest salary to be paid to any supervisor under this act and what will be the least salary paid?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have not a detailed statement of them all here; but take, for example, the First New York district, which includes greater New York, one of the largest districts in the United States. That would increase the salary of the supervisor there $956.70.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. What does he get under the present law?

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, he gets his $125 salary, and then a dollar a thousand, as I now remember. The figures, perhaps, in this New York district would reach $2,500.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. About $2,500?
Mr. HOPKINS. It might reach that.
Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. How long does he work?
Mr. HOPKINS. The supervisor in New York would probably work eighteen months.
Mr. McCLELLAN. And night and day at that.
Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Now, I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that in the cities where this increase takes place, much of the census work is eliminated from the duties assigned to the supervisor and assigned by the Director, under the act of Congress, to special agents selected by him?
Mr. HOPKINS. No; I will state to the gentleman that that information is not correct, because the enumeration of the population under the law is limited to the enumerators, and special agents can not be employed for that purpose.
Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Does the gentleman mean to say that the total duty of the enumerators is just taking the number of the people?
Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no. Of course the gentleman remembers the law on that.
Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Yes; but is not a good deal of the work relating to manufactures, and so forth, in all the cities of the United States cut out of the regular duties of the supervisors?
Mr. HOPKINS. The statistics of manufactures is taken by special agents; but I will say to the gentleman that only a small percentage of what was taken by special agents in the Eleventh and Tenth censuses will be so taken in the Twelfth Census. The great bulk of the work is left with the enumerators and the supervisors.
Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.
Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does this first section give the power to the Census Department to establish a separate printing office?
Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no; not at all. I have already answered that question two or three times, I will say to the gentleman. This is only the printing department that was established in the original act for doing the preliminary work.
Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Was there a printing department?
Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, certainly.
Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I find in the report here that you say that it seems proper that the head of the Census printing office shall receive a certain compensation.
Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly; and if the gentleman is familiar with the taking of the Tenth and Eleventh censuses he will remember that there was a printing department there and that we provided in the original act for the taking of the Twelfth Census that whatever was left of that should be turned over to the present office.
Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. But the difficulty that I know is felt by a good many of us is that we would like to know what it was that we debated and knocked out here some time ago.
Mr. HOPKINS. I can answer the gentleman fully upon that. The proposition that was made here in the House some time ago and voted down was a proposition to give the Director of the Census the authority to go outside and contract with private parties to print the Census reports. Now, the preliminary work is something entirely separate and distinct from the printing of the Census reports. It relates to the printing of these little bulletins that are sent out from time to time to aid in the taking of the census and to furnish early information to the general public; but it does not conflict at all with the printing of the Census reports proper.
Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Has the gentleman the bill here, to show that that was contemplated by the original law to be done by a separate printing office in the Census Bureau? I certainly understood, when the bill was argued, that we expected to have the printing done in the Government Printing Office.
Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman misapprehended the character of that debate entirely then, because all gentlemen understood that the law as it then existed was adequate to permit the Director of the Census to do all the preliminary work. The point that the Director of the Census made was that the facilities of the Government Printing Office were not such as to enable this work to be gotten out within the two-year limit—that is, the reports of the census proper; but I will say to the gentleman that this has nothing to do with that.
Mr. DALZELL. I understand the gentleman to say that this bill is entirely satisfactory to the Public Printer.
Mr. HOPKINS. Entirely so.
Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to my colleague from Illinois.
Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. Have you made any estimate as to the total increase in the expense of taking the census as the result of this bill?
Mr. HOPKINS. Well, I stated——
Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. I mean the total increase. You stated what it would be for the supervisors.
Mr. HOPKINS. The total increase is less than $80,000
Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. What is the present salary of the Director.
Mr. HOPKINS. Six thousand dollars.
Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. And this increases it how much?
Mr. HOPKINS. This increases it $1,500.
Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. Fifteen hundred dollars?
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.
Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.
Mr. MANN. I understand the object of the amendment proposed by the committee is that the salaries of supervisors shall be increased?
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.
Mr. MANN. The salaries of the enumerators are not to be increased?
Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.
Mr. MANN. I understand the enumerators were generally appointed in the different Congressional districts on the recommendation of the members of this House. That being the case, I suppose there would be no objection to the passage of the bill.
Mr. HOPKINS. Well, I am not able to answer that question.
Mr. RIDGELY. I have not had time to look up the bill, but is this increase in the salaries of supervisors uniform?
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir; the supervisor gets his proportionate increase on the amount of work he has to do.
Mr. RIDGELY. It is 2 per cent on the whole amount you give him?
Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no.
Mr. RIDGELY. One other question. It makes some change as to the printing, as I understood. The printing is to be done in the Census Office.
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir; the preliminary.
Mr. RIDGELY. And not to be let out?
Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no; not to be let out to private parties.
Mr. COX. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee for a question.
Mr. COX. I desire to ask you simply this question. The Director's salary was fixed in the first instance at $6,000. Now, why do you increase it $1,500?
Mr. HOPKINS. The reason for the increase arises from the fact that under the present law—he being made the head of the department and made responsible for the entire work, and for the disbursement of the $9,000,000 appropriated for this purpose—the committee find that the first salary was inadequate, and that this increase would give him less than is given to other Government officials with far less responsibility.
Mr. COX. Pardon me. That simply means that when you fixed the salary at the start it was too low?
Mr. HOPKINS. We fixed it too low.
Mr. COX. That is the whole substance of it?
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.
Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I want to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. COX. I want to ask the gentleman one further question. When does this increase of salary take effect? Does it date back?
Mr. HOPKINS. It dates from the passage of the act.
Mr. COX. What was the salary of the former Director?
Mr. HOPKINS. Six thousand dollars, as I remember the law.
Mr. COX. I am at a loss to see why you make this $7,500.
Mr. HOPKINS. It is because of the extra responsibility and work being done.
Mr. COX. No more responsibility than the other man had.
Mr. HOPKINS. He has a great deal more responsibility.
Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. As I understand this bill, it gives the supervisor 2 per cent on the amount obtained by the enumerators within their respective districts?
Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.
Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Now, I want to know what are the limitations upon the powers of the supervisors to create enumerator districts?
Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the gentleman that the law fixes that the supervisors' districts shall contain a definite population, or approximately a definite population. That is fixed by law. Their salaries have been fixed by the Director of the Census.
Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is what I wanted to know.
Mr. HOPKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. McRAE. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 34.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. HOPKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE SHIPPING BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that the minority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries may be given one week further to present the minority report on the shipping bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries be given one week more to present their views to the House on the shipping bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR HAWAII.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts presents a privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report and that the statement of the House conferees may be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the Senate bill (S. 222) to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effects of the action agreed upon, and recommend it in the accompanying conference report, namely:

The Senate agrees to the amendment of the House in the nature of a substitute with the following amendments:

Section 1, line 3, after the word "Hawaii," insert the words "in force." This in no way affects the provision of the House bill and is merely for clearness.

The amendment to section 4 simply states with more clearness that persons then resident in the Hawaiian Islands are referred to.

The amendments in section 5 are to make the statement definite that the Constitution as a whole is extended to the Territory of Hawaii.

In section 10, line 1, the words "obligations and contracts" were stricken out, for the reason that they might be construed to continue in force existing labor contracts.

The provision in section 10, line 13, is a new provision, with the manifest purpose of preventing imprisonment for debt in the Territory of Hawaii. The succeeding amendment in section 10 was to make it definite that the laws of the United States affecting merchant seamen would not be changed or modified.

In section 18 the section is stricken out and the following is inserted: "No idiot or insane person, and no person who shall be expelled from the legislature for giving or receiving bribes or being accessory thereto, and no person who, in due course of law, shall have been convicted of any criminal offense punishable by imprisonment, whether with or without hard labor, for a term exceeding one year, whether with or without fine, shall register to vote or shall vote or hold office in, or under, or by authority of, the government, unless the person so convicted shall have been pardoned and restored to his civil rights." This amendment to section 18 was in the original Senate bill and in the bill reported by the commissioners appointed by the President, and was finally thought essential by the conferees.

The amendment to section 34, line 4, restores the provision of the Senate bill as to the age qualification for senators—30 years.

In section 37, lines 2 and 3, the words "general or," inserted in the House bill, were stricken out because no vacancy could be filled except at a special election.

The amendment to section 40 was to require the representative to be a resident of the district from which he is elected.

In section 49, line 5, "shall" was stricken out and "may" inserted to make it consistent with section 51.

In section 55, line 25, the words struck out and inserted were for the purpose of making it certain that the section should have no retroactive effect. In line 37 of the same section the amendment makes more general the provision of the House bill and puts the control of the sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquors in the legislature. In lines 72 and 73 of the same section the provision of the House bill was considered unnecessary.

Section 60. This amendment does away with all provision for the payment of taxes as a qualification for voting.

Section 62. The amendment in detail was made necessary by having the qualifications for voters apply to all elections.

Section 64. The amendment striking out the House provision was for the reason that the provision was inapplicable to Hawaii for the reason that there are no political parties.

The amendment to section 73 in effect put the sale, leasing, and transfer of the public lands in Hawaii under the laws of Hawaii, with the exception of the restriction upon the power to lease for a longer term than five years, until action of Congress and the provision of the House bill as to validating sales and transfers after July 7, 1898, is made subject to the approval of the President. The further amendment in the same section, striking out the words "in good faith," was for the reason that they were no longer necessary after the amendment making the transfers subject to the approval of the President had been agreed upon.

The amendment to section 76 places the duties required of the commissioner of labor to be appointed upon the United States Commissioner of Labor. It was thought that he had the machinery and past experience to enable him to make such comprehensive reports as the section provides for, and that it was unnecessary to appoint a commissioner specially for that purpose. It was also thought best that the reports should be made to Congress instead of to the legislature of Hawaii, presupposing, of course, that all reports to Congress would be in the possession of the Hawaiian legislature.

The provision stricken out of section 80 was objected to by the Senate as the statistics called for in such detail concerning lands, leases, etc., were already implied in the duties of the United States Commissioner of Labor as prescribed in section 76, and the penal provisions at the end of the section for mere failure to make reports in such detail were deemed harsh.

The amendment is section 82, striking out the words "not less than" was thought necessary as it was deemed sufficient to have two associate justices with the chief justice.

The amendments to section 86 in effect separate the Territorial from the Federal jurisdiction in courts of the Territory of Hawaii, as provided in the House bill, the provision for appeals from the supreme court of Hawaii to the ninth judicial circuit being stricken out and the jurisdiction of United States district and circuit courts is conferred upon the Federal court established.

The first amendment in section 92 provides salaries for the judges of the circuit courts at $3,000 each, and provides, further, that the salaries of the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court and of the judges of the circuit courts shall be paid by the United States. This is made necessary by the change in the bill which provides that the appointments shall be made by the President of the United States and not by the governor of the Territory. Also, the marshal's pay is raised from $2,000 to $2,500, and the United States district attorney's from $2,000 to $3,000.

In section 97, line 19, the House provision was deemed no longer necessary.

The amendment in section 98, line 9, stricken out, was one postponing for a year the application of the navigation laws of the United States to the islands, restricting the coastwise trade to American vessels.

The provision in section 101 requiring the departure of Chinese laborers, 10 per cent per annum, was stricken out, as it was objected to by the Senate.

Section 104: The amendment to this section substituting forty-five days for sixty days as the time when the act should go into operation, was deemed a safe period.

W. S. KNOX,
R. R. HITT,
JOHN A. MOON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be agreed to. I desire to state what the substantial differences are between this bill and the bill as it left the House, because they may not have been caught from the reading of the statement. The first substantial difference is the striking out of the provision for the payment of a poll tax as a requisite for voting. As the bill left the House it provided for the payment of a poll tax of $1, payable in the month of March previous to election. The result of the first conference was that the Senate provision was put in for the payment of a personal tax of $5. After that provision was inserted providing for the payment of the personal tax of $5, the bill came back to a second conference and, as a result, all provisions for the payment of a tax as a qualification for voting is stricken out. There is now no qualification but citizenship, age of 21 years, residence of one year, and the ability to read, write, and speak the English or Hawaiian language.

The next amendment that is of any consequence was the land provision, which was contained in paragraph 73 of the House bill. The House bill provided that hereafter all transfers of land in Hawaii, by lease or otherwise, should be reported to our Secretary of the Interior and have the approval of the Land Office, and that that must take place within a period of sixty days. A letter from the Department said that it would be utterly impossible to attend to such matters here within sixty days or six months even, and the effect would be virtually to tie up all land transfers in Hawaii. So as the bill stands now, all transfers of land in Hawaii are in accordance with Hawaiian law and the Hawaiian practice up to the present time, except leases of more than five years, and they can not be made till Congress shall make further provision.

As to the sales that took place between July 7 and September 28, their legality is made to depend upon the approval of the President. That is a provision which was contained in the Senate bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman says the conferees have stricken out the provision as to the poll tax. Does that mean no poll tax, or does it mean the old Hawaiian law is in force?

Mr. KNOX. There is no provision for a poll tax whatever.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The Hawaiian law in regard to that matter is not in force at all.

Mr. KNOX. Not at all; there is no requisite for the payment of a poll tax.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I asked the question for this reason: I thought if the Hawaiian poll tax was left as a tax, it might be in force and be overlooked if this provision was stricken out.

Mr. KNOX. Oh, no; in addition to that it was discovered that there was a Hawaiian law for imprisonment for debt, and an additional provision was put in so that there should be no provision of that sort or for the payment of a poll tax.

Mr. BALL. In the confusion I failed to catch the provision in regard to the labor contracts. Will the gentleman explain about them?

Mr. KNOX. That was section 10, and it was my fault that I did not mention it before, although the change is very slight. As the bill left the House all rights in law and equity were reserved. In conference we struck out the words "obligations and contracts," through fear that by keeping them we might preserve some of those labor contracts, which the bill entirely eradicates.

Mr. BALL. And there is nothing in the bill recognizing them?

Mr. KNOX. No; the labor contracts are not recognized in any way.

Mr. McRAE. I want to ask if the report has been printed in a shape so that we can get at it to know what it is?

Mr. KNOX. The agreement of the conferees was printed in the RECORD of the 16th of this month.

Mr. McRAE. Is the bill printed as agreed upon by the conferees?

Mr. KNOX. The bill substantially as agreed upon is in print. It is Senate bill No. 222, the print of April 18. The changes from what the bill was when it left the House are so slight and so few that I thought I could state them intelligently.

Mr. McRAE. Is the paragraph in regard to alien contract labor in the bill?

Mr. KNOX. Yes; the provision the gentleman offered in the House is in the bill.

Mr. TERRY. I notice that by the conference report the words "in good faith" are stricken out.

Mr. KNOX. Yes.

Mr. TERRY. I should like the gentleman to read the context of the bill in which those words appeared.

Mr. KNOX. That will be found in section 73:

That, subject to the approval of the President, all sales, grants, leases, and other dispositions of the public domain, and agreements concerning the same; and all franchises granted in good faith by the Hawaiian government in conformity with the laws of Hawaii between the 7th day of July, 1898, and the 28th day of September are ratified and confirmed.

It was the intention of both bills to ratify and confirm contracts for the sale and actual transfer of lands by the Hawaiian government between the date of the annexation resolution, July 7, and September 28. Those transfers were made when the parties supposed they had a right to make them, but the Attorney-General subsequently made a ruling that they could not lawfully be made. The intention was to validate them. The words "in good faith" were stricken out in conference and a provision substituted to the effect that these transfers must receive the approval of the President. We thus designated an officer who should decide upon the propriety and validity of those transfers.

Mr. TERRY. The only objection I have to that is this: That in the multiplicity of business on the hands of the President and in view of the hurried way in which these things would have to be transacted by him, he could not always inquire into the facts. The words "in good faith," which appeared in the bill as it went from the House, would make the validity of those transfers a judicial question that the courts might inquire into more fully than could the President of the United States. I think it unfortunate that the words "in good faith" have been stricken out.

Mr. KNOX. We thought it better to put this matter in the hands of the President to decide upon the validity of such transfers, rather than leave in the bill language which perhaps might require the courts to pass upon the question.

Mr. TERRY. My point is that it would be safer, where a question of good faith is involved, to vest the power of determination in a tribunal that could inquire into the facts, as the President can not very well do.

Mr. KNOX. We desired to avoid litigation as much as possible. The United States holds these lands upon a naked trust for the Hawaiian people. We have no interest in the proceeds of the sales of those lands.

Mr. TERRY. I know it was very important to preserve the rights which parties supposed they were acquiring when those grants were made after the country belonged to the United States.

Mr. KNOX. Unquestionably.

Another important provision was that in regard to the application of the coasting laws of the United States. Under the bill as it left the House it was provided that a year should elapse before those laws should go into operation with respect to Hawaii. It was insisted on the part of the Senate that those laws should go into operation at once; and on that point the House conferees yielded. It was shown that there had been preparation made over the entire country to engage in this coasting trade; and hence that provision was stricken out.

Another important matter in connection with the conference was the agreement of the Senate to the establishment of a legislative court—that is, not a constitutional court, but a court clothed with all the jurisdiction of a district and circuit court—and the taking out of the Senate bill the provision which allowed an appeal from the supreme court of Hawaii to the Ninth judicial district. By this action we accomplish the purpose of entirely separating the Federal from the Territorial jurisdiction, and we provide that Territorial litigation shall end in Hawaii.

Another material provision was an amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], which was not agreed to in conference. It was thought that the provision for the ascertainment of statistics in regard to labor in the Hawaiian Islands was ample in the bill as it stood and that therefore the amendment was unnecessary.

The other amendment which was stricken out was the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri requiring the deportation of the Japanese and Chinese laborers from the island of Hawaii at the rate, I think, of 10 per cent a year. The Senate insisted upon that provision being stricken out; and the reasons in favor of doing so were very forcible, from the fact that the moment these labor contracts are at an end a Japanese subject is as free a citizen of Hawaii as any other person, and we could not deport him without running in direct opposition to our treaty provisions with Japan.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The gentleman has referred to the amendments which I offered regarding labor and regarding agricultural statistics. I understand that the conferees on the part of the House have agreed that the amendment relating to agricultural statistics should be stricken out.

Mr. KNOX. The provision for the surveyor——

Mr. NEWLANDS (continuing). And stricken out, first, because you claim the provision for agricultural statistics was covered by that provision of the statute relating to the Commissioner of Labor?

Mr. KNOX. Precisely.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And also because the Senate objected to the penalties imposed on those who refused to make the statements required as to the number of laborers employed, the wages paid, etc. Now, did it occur to the conferees that they could leave that section as to agricultural statistics in the bill and strike out the penalty if it was offensive?

Mr. KNOX. It did; and I assure the gentleman that we stood by his amendment as long as there was any use to do it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And do I understand that the gentleman abandoned it finally upon the assumption that those statistics were covered by the preceding section, relating to industrial statistics?

Mr. KNOX. That was part of it, perhaps, but the main reason was that we were finally obliged to yield in order to secure an agreement on the conference report.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Was objection made to the provision in relation to agricultural statistics?

Mr. KNOX. There was very strenuous objection to the multiplication of offices, and it was thought—and I submit that to the gentleman himself—it was thought that the very broad provision as to the statistics and all that the Commissioner of Labor is to ascertain would cover all that the gentleman desires to get at. It was also thought, if the gentleman will allow me, that the question of merely obtaining this information, which will be obtained and reported to Congress on the other provisions, was not one upon which we could afford to say that there should be no agreement upon this bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman refer me to any portion of the section relating to the Commissioner of Labor which authorizes him to collect statistics as to the area of landholdings and the character of the landholdings and the character of the cultivation?

Mr. KNOX. Well, I will call the gentleman's attention to this:

It shall be the duty of the United States Commissioner of Labor to collect, assort, arrange, and present in an annual report statistical details relating to all departments of labor in the Territory of Hawaii, especially in relation to the commercial, industrial, social, educational, and sanitary conditions of the laboring classes——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the gentleman claim that that language compels the Commissioner of Labor to make statements as to the area of agricultural holdings and the character of the cultivation?

Mr. KNOX. I did not quite finish—and to all such other subjects as Congress may by law direct.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Hereafter.

Mr. KNOX. Certainly. We are not legislating now for all the future. I do not pretend that we have a bill here that no person can criticise. We should have been something more than human if we had that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the gentleman recollect that the House, by its judgment, determined that it wished statistics as to the area of agricultural holdings and the character of cultivation?

Mr. KNOX. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And that that part of the question relating to the collection of statistics has been left out of this bill and intrusted, as the gentleman says, to future bills?

Mr. KNOX. I do admit that, and I say to the gentleman that we tried in good faith to carry out the order of the House, but were finally compelled to yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I trust that the House, then, will vote down this report and give the conferees some idea of the consistency and fixedness of will of this House.

Mr. KNOX. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the House will not vote down this report, providing, as it does, for the government of this Territory, which the gentleman's annexation resolution gave to this country and which has called upon us to provide a government. I hope the House will not vote down such a report as this and such a great bill as this simply because it does not comport with the particular ideas of the gentleman from Nevada about land statistics.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I object to it because it does not comport with the view of this House.

Mr. KNOX. Very well; I yielded to the gentleman's amendment. I accepted it. No great consideration was given to it. I can give to the gentleman statistics as to every acre of land to-day in Hawaii. They are all accounted for, all the holdings, and they are in printed report No. 305. In Hawaii, in the land office, the information can be obtained as to the landholdings in the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; the gentleman informs me that somewhere else this information can be obtained. What we want is a commissioner whose duty it shall be to obtain this information for the Congress of the United States.

Mr. KNOX. Very likely, but you can not expect to have this information placed upon your table at once. It may be that it would be well to have all that; I do not think it is of any very great consequence; but while all consideration should be given, of course, to a gentleman who has given so much time to Hawaii as the gentleman from Nevada has done, I do hope that no one will seek to vote down this final report. [Applause.]

Now, the net result of all this is that the Senate has agreed to our amendment, which was a substitution of the House bill, with these amendments which I have stated.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining in the hour?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has forty minutes remaining.

Mr. KNOX. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], but I do not wish to yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have carefully watched the course of this Hawaiian bill through its various trials and tribulations, its amendments and changes before the committee, and its changes in the House, in the Senate, and in conference. The Committee on Territories have devoted to it a great deal of study, and have spent long days, covering weeks of time, in a careful consideration of it. It was not easy to draft a measure suited to Hawaii or to the conditions then prevailing.

I have paid particular attention to the labor feature of the bill, and upon a former occasion I offered some observations to the House upon that subject. The labors of the committee, in conjunction with the proceedings of the House and Senate and the results of the conference, have brought into the bill what are to my mind the best provisions that could have been enacted upon the subject of labor. It was extremely difficult to get information on and understand the real conditions.

I believe that the result of the action of the conference committee on the subject of the appointment of judges of the courts by the President is highly satisfactory, and that it impresses upon the bill an American feature. The rights of franchise, as given by the combined judgment of the House and Senate and as finally molded in conference, give full and free rights to the people.

I very much regret that the provision on the subject of deporting the Asiatics from Hawaii was not also agreed to in conference. Nearly one-half of the population of the Hawaiian Islands are Japanese and Chinese, and they will be a constant menace to this country as long as they remain there. The Chinese have for a long time been breaking across the border of Canada to this country, and many false and forged certificates have been discovered from time to time. I believe a law like the Chinese exclusion act must be passed to protect our labor from the Japanese. I very much doubt whether the provision in the bill providing that the Chinese shall not come from the Hawaiian Islands to this country will stand the test of the courts when the question comes up on the subject of the right, under the Constitution, to have a law of that kind passed restricting persons to a certain part of our country.

But the general features of the bill, as finally agreed to and now before us, seem to be as good as under the present circumstances can be hoped for, while the bill as at first introduced contained too many Hawaiian traces. I believe that the bill in its present form is a good American bill, outside of the special features to which attention has been called by the gentleman from Nevada, and on which I am not informed. I desire to commend the committee of conference, and the House committee having the bill in charge, and Congress, and as well to congratulate the people of Hawaii upon having what in my judgment is a good measure for their first government.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, out of my time I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Nevada.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nevada is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, I concur in the commendation which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] has bestowed upon this bill in its general features. It has been considered thus far in a nonpartisan way by the members of this House. There is not a man on either side who does not want to secure the best government that is possible for Hawaii.

There is not a member on either side that does not want to secure for that island the benefits of republican institutions; but I fear that we have lost sight of the fact that the maintenance of republican institutions in those islands will depend more upon economic conditions existing there than upon the form of government which we give them.

The form of government may conform to the highest theories of republican institutions, and yet, unless we have able, intelligent, courageous, and fearless men to discharge the official duties imposed upon them by this law, and unless we can have a constituency there, capable, courageous, determined to maintain their rights, free government may fail.

Now, what are the economic conditions which prevail there? First, a condition of land monopoly. The principal product of the islands is sugar. The exports of sugar amount to $20,000,000 annually, constituting substantially the entire export of the island, and the production of sugar is almost entirely in the hands of large corporations, whose land holdings aggregate in area from one thousand to five or six thousand acres.

By incorporating Hawaii in the United States we gave those islands the benefit of the enlarged markets of this country. We have added $10,000,000 to the annual value of their sugar product. The cost of sugar production there is $35 a ton.

The duty on sugar imported to this country is about $40 a ton. Thus the value of their products to them is doubled by free admission to our markets; so that they are receiving $80 a ton, and this extraordinary benefit given to the agricultural land there, by making these islands a part of the United States, is $10,000,000 of clear gain annually given to the landowners, and not a dollar is applied to the establishment there of a superior system of labor. And yet the very foundation stone of our protective system is that it protects and elevates labor.

Now, I make no reflection upon the capacity or honesty of the landowners of Hawaii. You can not expect a people who are the beneficiaries of an abuse to reform it. That statement applies to human nature universally, and the legislation must be inaugurated by this Congress which will reform it. Now, what was the purpose of these amendments which were introduced upon the floor of this House, debated by the House, and adopted after due deliberation? The purpose of the amendment was to select there from the people of Hawaii a labor commissioner who should report to the United States Commissioner of Labor here, giving all the statistical information relating to labor and relating to the industries there.

The conferees have changed all that. They have provided that instead of having a labor commissioner there, who would be selected by the people and who would be selected probably as a result of agitation of the labor question—and I think that agitation should be stimulated there, as well as here—instead of that they have determined that our United States Commissioner of Labor at Washington should discharge this duty.

Then what do you do with reference to landholding? We provided that the surveyor-general there should make an annual report to the United States Labor Department here and to the governor and legislature there covering the area of the various landholdings, the character of cultivation, the nativity of the laborers, and the wages paid. So that you see we aimed nothing at the vested interests there. Our legislation did not disturb existing conditions, but we simply planted the seed for action hereafter.

Now, what have the conferees done? They have left out the labor commissioner there and substituted the United States Labor Commissioner here, 7,000 miles away from the scene of inquiry and contemplated reform. They have stricken out entirely the section requiring annual reports as to the area of agricultural holdings, the character of the cultivation, the number of laborers employed on each holding, and the nativity of the laborers and their wages; and they have done so because it imposed a penalty of a hundred dollars upon the landowners for failure to respond to the demand of the surveyor-general for such reports.

A most reasonable penalty for a failure to furnish information necessary to future labor legislation is stricken out because it is alleged to be harsh and oppressive.

The landowner is to be protected from questions, whilst labor remains abject and servile. But assuming that they wanted to wipe out the penalty; assuming they did not wish to have the machinery of the law which would compel the enforcement of its mandates; would it not have been sufficient to strike out the penalty alone?

Instead of striking that out alone, they struck out also the portion of the same provision which compels the surveyor-general to make reports on the area of agricultural holdings, the character of cultivation, the nativity of the laborers, and the wages paid laborers. So far as I am concerned, I would have been content if they had united the duties of these two officers into one, provided that in doing so they had imposed on the one officer the duties that this House by its solemn action imposed upon the two.

Now, we have this bill coming to us on the report of the conferees with some fifty or sixty amendments. I understand there is objection only to the amendment of section 76, covering the question of labor, and section 80, covering the question of land monopoly; and I understand that the only way that we can get at these amendments and insist upon the substance of the original sections is to reject the report, and then the matter will go back to the conferees, and they can easily shape these sections by consolidating the duties in one officer—a commissioner of labor, who can report annually both as to labor conditions and land monopoly.

The latter question is entirely eliminated from this bill, and yet the question of land monopoly in these islands of the Tropics is the most important question of the future. Heretofore the landowner has grown wealthy while labor has been degraded.

The aim of our legislation should be, whilst avoiding industrial disturbances, to provide gradually for a better system of labor; to promote small land holdings and to discourage the concentration of land ownership and the system of servile and degraded labor which it promotes. There are 120,000 people in those islands to-day, of whom 60,000 are Asiatics and about 40,000 Kanakas, 17,000 Portuguese, and 8,000 Americans and other whites.

The population of those islands will increase. Shall we so shape the land system as to promote the immigration of people who can become self-respecting citizens or shall we maintain a system which promotes peonage without rights in the soil?

We should so legislate that some of the increased profit of production, to which I have alluded, should go to self-respecting labor and not all go to land syndicates. We should encourage the immigration of the people from Porto Rico, which is the densest agricultural population in the civilized world, to the Hawaiian Islands. Seven-tenths of the population of Porto Rico are whites. The island is overcrowded.

The people are accustomed to the very pursuits which are common in Hawaii—the raising of sugar, tobacco, and coffee. We should see to it that gradually the standard of citizenship in the Hawaiian Islands is raised by discouraging the employment of Asiatics, by encouraging the employment of American citizens, either white or black; by the employment of the citizens of Porto Rico, the employment of Italians and Portuguese, encouraged by higher rates of labor than prevail, and who would gladly go to these islands. With such a system the maintenance of republican institutions in Hawaii is possible, but without reform in the system of land tenure you will have permanently a small, wealthy planter class and a large population of servile laborers, incapable of citizenship and a constant menace to free institutions. I hope that this important matter will go back to the conferees, and that they will be instructed to adhere to the spirit of the House's action as exhibited in the original bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nevada has expired.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN].

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, being a member of the Committee on Territories, which drafted this Hawaiian bill, I have no intention or inclination to criticise or belittle the labors of that committee. I believe the bill in its present form, as reported back to this House from the conference committee of the House and the Senate, is, generally speaking, an excellent one. I regret very deeply that some of the provisions which the House inserted in this bill have been stricken out in conference. I desire to call attention particularly to one of the provisions of the conference report, which appears in section 98 of the bill, wherein the conference committee struck out of the bill a part of the provision inserted by the House relating to the shipping laws.

In order to thoroughly understand this matter it is necessary that I should state in the first instance that the shipping laws of the United States provide that all shipping carried between American ports must be carried in American ships. A provision was sought to be placed in this bill extending unreservedly the shipping laws of the United States to Hawaii. That would mean, if adopted, that immediately upon the passage of such a provision all shipping between the United States and Hawaii must be carried by American ships.

Theoretically, that sounds very well, and nearly every one who has sought to place the provision in that form in the bill has defended it on theoretical grounds; but upon examination of this question before the House committee the fact was developed that there are not now enough ships available, especially on the Pacific coast, to carry the shipping between the United States and these islands if all the ships of any nationality now engaged in that trade were allowed to continue therein.

It was for that reason that the House committee inserted in this bill a provision that the shipping laws should not be extended to Hawaii for the period of one year; and during this period of one year Americans will have ample time and notice that they must provide American ships if they expect to continue in this trade. The reason for this provision, as I before stated, is that there are not now ships enough engaged in this trade to carry the tonnage between the Pacific coast and the Hawaiian Islands. That is the naked truth—the frozen fact! Members can theorize about it until we are tired, but, in the language of a distinguished and deceased(?) statesman, "It is a condition and not a theory that we are confronted with" on the Pacific coast.

American products are rotting on American soil and Hawaiian products are rotting on Hawaiian soil for lack of ships to carry them either way, and yet some gentlemen continue to rise and proclaim that there are plenty of ships, and they desire to strike out the one-year clause in order to encourage American shipping. I yield to no man on this floor the honor of being more anxious to encourage American shipping than I am, but, in God's name, is it necessary for the American Congress to destroy what we now have in order to give us something else, and especially to destroy what we now have before they are prepared to give us something else in its place? What are we of the Pacific Northwest to do if this conference provision is agreed to. We have built up a prosperous line of traffic between Puget Sound and Hawaii, now being carried in foreign ships. We expect to replace those foreign ships with American ships just as soon as money and men and a first-class shipyard can produce the vessels.

You can not build a ship in a day. It takes from a year to fifteen months to construct a ship. Now, if this law is passed in its proposed form, we can not continue to carry on that traffic in foreign ships, because that is against the law; and we can not carry it on in American ships, because we have had no time nor opportunity to build them. Now, when a man is ready to buy a new wagon, he does not burn up the old one until he gets the new one. I claim it is false in theory, and I know it is false in practice, to destroy by law the present commerce between the Pacific Northwest and Hawaii before you are prepared to give us something else in the place of what we now enjoy. The shipbuilders of our country expect to commence at once to build ships to carry on this trade, but it will take about a year to build these ships.

It is frequently asserted by those who oppose this one-year clause that if that clause is allowed to remain in the bill foreign ships will rush in and crowd American ships out of this traffic. Where will they come from? There is no provision in the law to-day that will prevent a foreign ship from engaging in this trade, and yet the fact stares us in the face to-day that there are not ships enough there to carry on the trade. Now, if the ships are not there under existing law, what makes any man think there will be a mighty rush of ships in the next year if the law is left just as it is now? They have not rushed in under that law in the past. What makes you think they will do in the future exactly what they have failed to do in the past?

As a slight piece of ex parte testimony, for the benefit of those gentlemen who are proclaiming aloud that there are plenty of ships to carry all the traffic, I might say that one of the distinguished Hawaiian gentlemen who appeared before our committee in relation to the Hawaiian bill said to me that it would in all probability be impossible for him to secure a stateroom from San Francisco to Hawaii on any of the steamers, and that he would probably have to pay an officer of the boat a hundred-dollar bonus for an officer's room on the voyage. And yet in the face of such facts as this the people who desire to monopolize this trade and be the beneficiaries of this legislation still continue to proclaim that "there are plenty of ships."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Certainly I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understood the gentleman to say a few moments ago that crops were rotting on the docks or shores of the Pacific coast and in the island of Hawaii. What are those crops?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Well, in my State we produce almost everything—lumber, coal, fruit, and grain, and a multiplicity of other products.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What disease is it that is rotting your coal? [Laughter.]

Mr. CUSHMAN. Perhaps that is a very fine point. I guess it is. It is so fine that it is not visible to the naked eye. When the products of the earth which are necessary for man's use, which need to be transported to a proper market, lie idle and useless because they can not be transported to a market, that is a condition of industrial paralysis and commercial rottenness, whether the products actually stink or not. [Laughter.]

As a matter of fact, the ships are not there to carry the products and the traffic back and forth. Every available craft on the Pacific coast, almost, has gone into the Alaskan trade by reason of the unprecedented rush to Cape Nome. Why? Because the Alaskan run pays a great deal more than the Hawaiian run. Therefore the ships have been withdrawn, and they can not be replaced in a day, a week, nor a month. I hope that the members of this House will refuse to agree to the conference report, and when that is disagreed to a motion will be in order that this bill may again be sent to the conference committee with instructions to the House members to insist upon the House provision in the bill.

Some few men, who are trying to reap a rich harvest in the Hawaiian trade to the detriment and exclusion of others, have said that we were selfish because we wanted this provision in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I say to you that had it not been for the hardy and heroic race who blazed a pathway through the primeval wilderness, and populated and built up the mighty and myriad industries of the West (that in the march of events has linked us to the East), that the American flag would not to-day be floating over Hawaii. And yet, when our people are actuated by an honorable ambition to reap a small portion of the benefits that their industry and push have helped to bring into being, some two-by-four statesman arises and proclaims that we are selfish. I deny it. The selfishness is on the other side of this proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say one word in answer to the gentleman who has just taken his seat. I appreciate very fully his feeling in regard to this matter. As a member of the committee, he was given the privilege of reporting this amendment providing that the coasting laws of the United States extended to Hawaii should not take effect until the expiration of one year. Now, what is the trouble with the bill as agreed upon? It does perhaps affect somewhat injuriously his people in Seattle, because they have not got their ships ready; but the people in the rest of the United States have been at work. Knowing for almost two years that the coasting laws of the United States would be extended so as to operate between this country and Hawaii, they have been preparing for it; and the most magnificent steel ships have been built in Philadelphia and have gone to the Pacific coast, and many have been purchased. Not only is there no lack of ships on the Pacific coast, but there are so many now that they go to Hawaii in ballast.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman will allow me to say that I have a statement from the representative of one of the largest shipping lines that they are short of business, and that the retention of this provision in the bill would let into our coasting trade a vast volume of foreign ships, to the absolute destruction of American-owned ships on that coast.

Mr. KNOX. Undoubtedly, Mr. Speaker, that is true. So far as Seattle is concerned, I believe they have there only one American ship. They have one with reference to which the House a few days ago passed by unanimous consent a bill granting an American register.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is it not a fact that about 50 per cent of the traffic between the Pacific coast and Hawaii is carried on at this time in foreign-built vessels?

Mr. KNOX. That has been the fact.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is it not so now?

Mr. KNOX. Oh, no; they are all prepared for this trade now. Some of our friends from California will tell the gentleman the condition of things in that regard.

Mr. JONES of Washington. One more question. Does the gentleman know of any ships built now that expect to engage in the trade from Puget Sound to Hawaii?

Mr. KNOX. I do not. In that particular locality you have been busy carrying on your trade with Alaska. You have had more than you could do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not at all.

Mr. KNOX. These other people in the rest of the country are prepared for engaging in the trade with Hawaii. It is impossible, in preparing a bill of this kind, to obviate the fact that some people on the coast, at some towns, some cities, some localities, will for a short time be injuriously affected. But their remedy is to buy or build American ships, as the people of other parts of the United States have done.

Mr. JONES of Washington. One further question. It was stated by the gentleman from Ohio that there are a great many foreign-built ships that will go into this trade if this provision be adopted. Now, what would induce vessels that are not in this trade now to go into it for a year or two?

Mr. KNOX. Oh, there are tramp steamers that would gladly enter into this business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They will not take the regular trade?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Sixteen minutes.

Many MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. KNOX. I move the previous question on agreeing to the report.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order now to move concurrence in all these amendments except as to those sections that have been objected to?

The SPEAKER. The report must first be adopted or rejected as a whole.

The question being taken on agreeing to the report,

The SPEAKER said: The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 27, noes 96.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Cheboygan Harbor, Michigan—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 27, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SCOTT, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

COMMISSIONED NAVAL OFFICERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 18th instant, a supplemental statement showing the number of commissioned officers of different grades and corps on sea duty, on leave of absence or furlough, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 222) to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 10301) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901; and

A bill (H. R. 10696) relating to the Twelfth and subsequent censuses, and giving the Director thereof additional power and authority in certain cases, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. 10) providing for the printing of 3,000 copies of House Document No. 1041, relating to the preliminary examination of reservoir sites in Wyoming and Colorado; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULBERSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Austin, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to the surviving soldiers who served in the Indian wars from the year 1846 to the year 1860, inclusive; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MONEY. I present a joint resolution of the legislature of Mississippi, urging that an additional appropriation be made for the improvement of the navigation of the Homochitto River, in that State. I ask that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution of the legislature of the State of Mississippi memorializing the Congress of the United States to make further and additional appropriation to improve the navigation of the Homochitto River, in the State of Mississippi.

Be it resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, respectfully memorialized and requested to make an additional appropriation supplemental to the amount already appropriated to improve the navigation of the Homochitto River. This river has its course through a populous and fertile country for a hundred miles or more, but its navigation is obstructed and prevented by rafts, timber jams, and shoal places of no great length and easily removable. Its course is from east to west, while the only trunk line of railroad through its section of country runs from north to south and leaves a large area of country without transportation. While an appropriation of $16,000 has already been made by Congress for improving the navigation of this river, the amount is insufficient to fully complete the work intended, and an additional appropriation is necessary not only to secure safe navigation of this river, but to prevent damage to and the destruction of the work already done by the amount so far appropriated.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, required to transmit certified copies of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the United States from Mississippi to be presented to Congress.

Passed the senate January 25, 1900.

JAMES T. HARRISON,
President of the Senate.

Passed the house February 5, 1900.

A. J. RUSSELL,
Speaker of the House.

OFFICE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Jackson, Miss., February 20, 1900.

I certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original filed in this office.

[SEAL.] J. L. POWER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. MONEY. I present a joint resolution of the legislature of Mississippi, urging the passage of House bill No. 3988, to reorganize and improve the United States Weather Bureau. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass H. R. 3988, being a bill to reorganize and improve the United States Weather Bureau.

Whereas the Weather Bureau Service of the United States is of incalculable benefit to the maritime and agricultural interests of the Southern States of the Union; and

Whereas a bill is now before the Congress of the United States to reorganize and improve said Weather Bureau branch of the Agricultural Department of the United States: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully memorialized and requested to pass H. R. 3988, being a bill to reorganize and improve the United States Weather Bureau; and the members of Congress from Mississippi are earnestly requested to use their best efforts to have such a law enacted.

Passed the senate February 2, 1900.

JAMES T. HARRISON,
President of the Senate.

Passed the house February 5, 1900.

A. J. RUSSELL,
Speaker of the House.

OFFICE SECRETARY OF STATE, Jackson, Miss., February 20, 1900.

I certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original filed in this office.

[SEAL.] J. L. POWER, Secretary of State.

Mr. MONEY. I present a joint resolution of the legislature of Mississippi, urging that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the channel of Ship Island Harbor from the terminus of the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad Company to main deep water. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States with reference to Ship Island Harbor and the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad Company.

Whereas the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad Company was incorporated by the State of Mississippi by act of the legislature approved February 23, 1882, which said act, among other powers, contained the following:

"SEC. 17. Be it further enacted, That the right, power, and authority to reclaim the submerged lands of said Mississippi Sound, for a distance of one-half mile in either direction east and west from the point of intersection of said line of railroad with the waters of said sound, extending 6 miles from the shore of the present mainland in a southerly direction, to take, have, and to hold said lands so reclaimed, and to enjoy, use, and control the same to special use and benefit of said company; to lease, re-lease, sell, convey, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of the same; to locate, construct, and thereafter to own and maintain and use suitable wharves, piers, breakwaters, basins, and depots, or other appurtenances, appendages, and buildings thereon necessary and proper for the loading and unloading, receiving and discharging freight and passengers from seagoing, lightering, and coasting vessels;" and

Whereas some question has been raised as to the validity of said grant from said State of Mississippi; and

Whereas it is expedient that the same should be confirmed unto the said railroad company by the Congress of the United States; and

Whereas the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad has been constructed for a distance of over 100 miles, and is being rapidly pushed to completion; and

Whereas it is only about 5½ miles from said pier to deep water leading to the main Ship Island Harbor; and

Whereas it is only a question of dredging a channel of sufficient depth for about 5½ miles in length to connect said terminus of said railroad with the deep-water harbor at Ship Island; and

Whereas Ship Island Harbor is recognized as one of the best harbors in the South; and

Whereas the great increase of exportation through Ship Island Harbor demands the opening of said channel from the terminus of said Gulf and Ship Island Railroad to deep water: Therefore, be it

Resolved, 1. That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, memorialized to make a suitable appropriation sufficient for the improvement of the channel leading from the terminus of said railroad to main deep water at Ship Island.

2. That the Congress of the United States be further memorialized and requested to confirm unto the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad Company the said grant recited in the preamble of these resolutions and contained in section 17 of the charter of said railroad company.

3. That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Mississippi and of the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, requested to use their best efforts to secure such appropriation as may be needed for the purpose above recited, as well as the ratification and confirmation of the said grant, at the present session of Congress.

Adopted by the senate February 8, 1900.

JOHN R. DINSMORE,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house February 14, 1900.

A. J. RUSSELL,
Speaker of the House.

OFFICE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Jackson, Miss., February 20, 1900.

I certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original filed in this office.

[SEAL.] J. L. POWER, Secretary of State.

Mr. SIMON presented a petition of Surprise Grange, No. 233, Patrons of Husbandry, of Oregon, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Surprise Grange, No. 233, Patrons of Husbandry, of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation to secure to the people of the country the advantages of State control of imitation dairy products; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HAWLEY presented a petition of the Columbia Historical Society, praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the desecration of the national flag; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURROWS presented petitions of the Christian Citizenship of Evart and the Christian Endeavor Union of Paw Paw, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in any post exchange, canteen, or transport, or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Company H, Third Infantry, Michigan National Guards, of Owosso, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the better equipment of the National Guard; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of Iron Molders' Union No. 104, of Albion, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation imposing a tax upon butterine, oleomargarine, and all kindred dairy products; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Pomona Grange No. 22, Patrons of Husbandry, of Branch County, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a liberal appropriation for the extension of free rural mail delivery; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of the city council of Cape Girardeau, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the Southern Missouri and Illinois Railroad and Bridge Company to construct a bridge at or within 5 miles of the city of Cape Girardeau, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2030) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, to report a new bill as a substitute, which I ask may be twice read and placed on the Calendar, and that Senate bill 2030 be indefinitely postponed.

The bill (S. 4462) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1896, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 2030 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. QUARLES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2642) for the relief of Robert F. Thompson for services rendered by him for compilation of the laws relating to Indian affairs, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 111) concerning certain Chippewa Indian reservations in Minnesota, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9711) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 117) to furnish the daily and bound CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the governors of Alaska and Porto Rico for distribution, to report it without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution was read, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Public Printer to distribute not more than 25 copies of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and 25 copies of the bound CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to persons, newspapers, or libraries designated by the governors of Alaska and Porto Rico, respectively.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT ON FISHERIES OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 198) providing for the printing and distribution of the general report of the expedition of the steamer Fishhawk to Porto Rico, including the chapter relating to the fish and fisheries of Porto Rico, as contained in the Fish Commission Bulletin for 1900, to report it with amendments; and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendments of the Committee on Printing were, in line 4, to strike out "fifteen thousand" and insert "seven thousand five hundred;" in line 8, to strike out "nine thousand" and insert "four thousand five hundred;" in line 9, to strike out "three thousand" and insert "one thousand five hundred;" and in line 10, to strike out "three thousand" and insert "one thousand five hundred;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed and bound, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, 7,500 copies of the general report of the expedition of the steamer Fishhawk to Porto Rico, including the chapter relating to the fish and fisheries of Porto Rico, as contained in the Fish Commission Bulletin for 1900; 4,500 for the use of the House, 1,500 for the use of the Senate, and 1,500 for the use of the United States Fish Commission.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

BUREAU OF AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 8,000 copies of any matter furnished by the Director of the Bureau of American Ethnology relating to researches and discoveries connected with the study of the American aborigines, the same to be issued as bulletins uniform with the annual reports, 1,500 of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,500 for distribution by the Bureau.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM DILLON, DECEASED.

Mr. MCCUMBER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1659) for the relief of the executor of William Dillon, deceased, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 1659) entitled "A bill for the relief of the executor of William Dillon, deceased," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH WIRES.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report a joint resolution, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 120) authorizing certain permits for telephone and telegraph wires was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to grant a permit for such telephone wires as may be necessary for the purposes of the Agricultural Department, and are also authorized to grant temporary permits to connect any political headquarters in the District of Columbia with the trunk lines of any telegraph or telephone company operating in said District, which temporary permits shall terminate January 1, 1901: Provided, That nothing in this resolution shall be construed to authorize the erection of any telephone or telegraph pole in the District of Columbia, excepting as already provided by law.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Does that measure come from the House?

Mr. MCMILLAN. No; it is reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. It is just a temporary arrangement for telephone wires to the Agricultural Department and also arrangement to connect any political headquarters in the District by telegraph or telephone.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 4463) relating to mining privileges on Indian reservations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 4464) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Pekin, in the State of Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WARREN introduced a bill (S. 4465) granting an increase of pension to William W. Lane; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4466) granting a pension to I. N. Bard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 4467) for an examination of the property of the Little Kanawha River Navigation Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 4468) to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4469) to amend section 41 of an act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MCENERY introduced a bill (S. 4470) for the relief of the heirs of Pierre Sauvé; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. PERKINS to the bill (H. R. 10450) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes, viz: Insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be made an examination of all-American cable route across the Pacific, beginning at the entrance to the Straits of Fuca, touching at Sitka and Dutch Harbor and extending along the Aleutian chain of islands, either on the north or the south side, as may be found expedient, thence along the most shoal waters available to the Philippine Islands. This examination shall be sufficient to show the availability of this route for cable purposes, the approximate depth of the water along the route, the most favorable points for cable landings, and the estimated cost of an all-American cable by this route, as compared with others which have been proposed, and the probable revenues to be derived from it.

Mr. CLAY submitted an amendment relating to the classification of employees of the Post-Office Department intended to be proposed by him to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted an amendment relative to the pay and allowance of officers of the corps of chaplains, professors of mathematics, and civil engineers of the Navy, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate whether General Torres, one of the officers of the Philippine army, came to General Otis with a flag of truce on February 5, 1899, the day after the fighting commenced between our forces and those of the Filipinos, and stated to General Otis that General Aguinaldo declared that fighting had been begun accidentally and was not authorized by him, and that Aguinaldo wished to have it stopped, and that to bring about a conclusion of hostilities he proposed the establishment of a neutral zone between the two armies of a width that would be agreeable to General Otis, so that during the peace negotiations there might be no further danger of conflict between the two armies, and whether General Otis replied that fighting having once begun must go on to the grim end. Was General Otis directed by the Secretary of War to make such an answer? Did General Otis telegraph the Secretary of War on February 9, 1899, as follows: "Aguinaldo now applies for a cessation of hostilities and conference. Have declined to answer?" And did General Otis afterwards reply? Was he directed by the Secretary of War to reply, and what answer, if any, did he or the Secretary of War make to the application to cease fighting?

The President is also requested to inform the Senate whether the flag of the Philippine republic was ever saluted by Admiral Dewey or any of the vessels of his fleet at any time since May 1, 1898. Did Admiral Dewey, at the request of Aguinaldo or any officer under him, send the vessels Concord and Raleigh to Subig Bay to assist Aguinaldo's forces in the capture of the Spanish garrison at that place? Did said vessels assist in the capture of the Spanish garrison, and after the surrender did they turn the prisoners thus taken over to the Philippine forces?

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under the rule.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 3465) to provide an American register for the steamship Garonne.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10301) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. 10696) relating to the Twelfth and subsequent censuses, and giving the Director thereof additional power and authority in certain cases, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Census.

SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution reported by Mr. MCCOMAS from the Committee on Privileges and Elections March 12, 1900, as follows:

Resolved, That NATHAN B. SCOTT has been duly elected a Senator from the State of West Virginia for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1899, and that he is entitled to his seat in the Senate as such Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], which will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the resolution and report be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections with instructions to investigate the case fully by all legal evidence offered to it.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, if there is to be debate upon this resolution, I ask consent of whoever proposes to take the floor to permit me to take the floor for a little while in explanation of a bill that I gave notice I would call up on last Wednesday and which I have withdrawn from time to time to suit the convenience of gentlemen in charge of privileged questions. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he will consent that I shall go on to-day?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Mississippi having given notice several days ago that he would ask leave to make some remarks that he now wishes to submit, I shall not interpose any objection, if no other Senator wishes to proceed now upon the resolution.

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not propose to bring this bill up for any purpose except to make remarks on it?

Mr. MONEY. I wish to present views to the Senate, to make a few remarks explanatory to go into the RECORD. I do not desire to push the consideration of the bill just now, of course. I do not expect any great delay about it, however; but I hope the Senators who are opposed to the bill will be prepared with their part of the debate as soon as they find it convenient to do so. I desire to submit some remarks to-day if I can get unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

ABANDONED PROPERTY IN INSURRECTIONARY DISTRICTS.

Mr. MONEY. I ask that Senate bill 602 be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 602) to revive and amend an act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I desire to give notice to the committee, and also to the Senate—and in this matter I have, I believe, the support of the committee—that in order to relieve any misconception of the purpose and intent of this bill I will submit an amendment to add another section, which I will ask the Secretary to read. The phraseology can be changed, of course, if it is objectionable.

I propose to add a new section to the bill, as follows:

SEC. 6. The provisions of this act shall apply exclusively to the cotton belonging to private owners seized by the agents of the Government of the United States under the act of March 13, 1863, called the captured and abandoned property act, which cotton was sold and the proceeds thereof placed in the Treasury of the United States, and shall not apply to any other property seized under said act.

Mr. President, that new section is intended to do away with any misunderstanding as to the class of people who are to be relieved by the provisions of this proposed act. It is also to prevent any misapprehension as to the number of claimants who may be admitted to a standing in the court to press any kind of a claim arising from the seizure or appropriation or destruction of property during the civil war.

I feel quite sure that there has been a misunderstanding of the bill, and I also am willing to admit that the misunderstanding comes quite naturally from its phraseology. The intent and purpose of this measure, however, has only been to give those claimants who owned cotton seized under the captured and abandoned property act of 1863 an opportunity to go into the court to prove their share of a trust fund now in the Treasury of the United States. The proof of the proceeds and sale of cotton, to whom it belonged, the price, the number of pounds, bales, and so on, are only to be found in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and consequently any claimant who shall present himself will have simply the task of proving the proprietorship of the cotton taken that went into the hands of the authorized agents, either military or fiscal, of the United States.

No other persons will have the right under this bill when that amendment is adopted (and there is no doubt about that) to have a standing in the court at all. Consequently it can not be construed by the most adverse Senator to mean that the door is to be opened to a general raid upon the Treasury. That opinion I know has been honestly entertained. I know it has been pressed by the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], whose general character for fair-mindedness we have all had occasion to respect, and who, on account of his personal character and about a third of a century of honorable and useful service in both Houses, I am inclined very much to yield to in matters of this sort.

Mr. President, this cotton was seized under the act of 1863 with no intention on the part of the Government to convert the proceeds to its own use. The law said that there should be an appeal to the Court of Claims on the part of any loyal owner of the cotton seized. The result of that was that the law expiring in 1868, the disloyal owners of cotton seized did not bring suit, because they were barred by the provisions of the act.

But later, after the expiration by limitation of the statute, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the cases of Pargoud, Padelford, Armstrong, Klein, administrator, and quite a number of other cases with which Senators are perhaps familiar who have studied this subject, declared that amnesty not only forgave the offender of disloyalty but condoned the offense and wiped it out as though it never had existed, and in its terms it restored him to his right of property. It is quite true that a month after that general amnesty proclamation Congress attempted to withdraw the authority which it had conferred upon the Executive to grant this general amnesty. The Supreme Court declared that the act was unconstitutional and that the order of amnesty must be recognized by the court.

Now, Mr. President, there are any number of cases which have declared that this sum of money arising from the sale of the cotton that belonged to private owners was a trust fund, and that the United States occupied no other relations to it except that one of a fiduciary character. The men who owned this cotton are the cestui que trusts, and this simply gives them permission to go into court and prove that so much of the money in that fund belonged to them. If they can not establish that fact (and they can only establish it from the papers, books, and records now in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury), then they are not entitled to anything whatever.

I for one am not considering now, and will not, the advisability and propriety of opening the courts generally to claimants of any kind or character of property. This bill has one single and sole purpose, and that is to distribute a trust fund.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to say one word, if the Senator pleases. While I agree with him that the United States should refund to the proper parties whatever there may be in this trust fund, I wish to suggest to him that the United States was supposed to have a very large interest in this fund originally. It results from the cotton belonging to the Confederate government, and it was supposed that that would amount to nearly a hundred million dollars. It has been given out from time to time to claimants until the amount left is only about $12,000,000, and it appears, and there is no doubt about it, that many honest claimants, perhaps more than would absorb the whole of it, have been left out.

I would not want to have the impression go to the country generally that the United States has made a large speculation out of it, because the United States has lost what it took from the Confederate government. It has lost by money being paid out that ought not to have been paid out, and those who ought to have received it have not received it. Undoubtedly they would be entitled to all this fund, and perhaps more. But if the claimants limit themselves to the fund now on hand I am willing that it should be paid out and distributed among those who can show themselves to be rightful claimants.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada, there is no intention, as I understand it, to open the case of the Confederate cotton. It is generally conceded that the cotton which had been sold to the Confederacy was a legitimate prize of war to the United States.

Mr. STEWART. That is true, but——

Mr. MONEY. That matter is entirely dehors the whole thing.

Mr. STEWART. But I wanted to explain why the Government had held on to it up to this time. It was supposed that it belonged to the Government, but the bulk of it having been paid out to persons who probably did not have good claims, there are bona fide claimants most of whom have been ignored, and it ought to be corrected by the proper tribunal. I agree with the Senator in that respect, but I did not want to have it understood that the Government had been seizing upon this private property without any excuse, because the reason for holding it at all was because it was supposed that that and much more belonged to the Government in consequence of having been taken as captured and abandoned property; but that not being the case, the Government having administered it, and the rightful owners not having received it, the Government is responsible to them, I think, and ought to pay it back.

Mr. MONEY. The Supreme Court have settled that question, Mr. President. This subject has been under consideration ever since the Thirty-ninth Congress. Bills have been introduced over and over in both Houses. They have been reported in every instance favorably—favorably from the Claims Committee of the Senate, favorably from the Judiciary Committee and the War Claims Committee in the House. We have a dozen executive documents here that have been sent in answer to inquiries made upon the Secretary of the Treasury, explaining this whole subject. We have gone over it again and again. There can be no dispute whatever upon the fact. There can be no dispute upon what the Supreme Court has decided. Gentlemen may think that the Supreme Court has erred in its decision, but they can not doubt what the Supreme Court has said. We very frequently disagree with the opinion of the Supreme Court. I am in a chronic state of disagreement myself with some of the opinions of that great tribunal, yet I bow to them.

Now, Mr. President, there is no intention in this bill to open up any claim to any person except to those who really owned the property, where the property was seized by the authorized agents of this Government, whether military or fiscal. Where cotton was not sold and the proceeds placed in the Treasury, and the proceeds of which sale could not be accurately told by the records of the Department itself, the claimant can not go into the Department and find anything there, by the consent of the Secretary or the officers of the Treasury Department, to bolster up his claim. He comes to the court simply with the proof of proprietorship and the proof of the seizure of the cotton, and he must trust to the archives of this Government for the proof which establishes his claim to a distributive share of this fund.

I said there could be very little debate about the facts. There can be none; and I think there can be just as little debate about what the court has said. The decisions are very numerous; they are so uniform that there must be consent as to what the court has determined. The court has determined, first, that every disloyal owner had been, by the general amnesty proclamation of December 20, 1878, pardoned his offense, his offense condoned, and that he had been fully restored to his rights of property. That is the language of the amnesty proclamation, and the court has recognized that as binding upon them in their actions as would be an act of Congress.

Another thing, Mr. President, according to the laws of civilized warfare, this cotton was not the subject properly of capture and appropriation. We have just repeated in The Hague Convention, to which we had our delegates, that private property must be respected in war. In the military conference held at Berlin in 1874, according to the report of Sir A. Horsford, it was determined that private property of every kind must be respected by hostile armies, and in the Articles of War, drawn up by Dr. Lieber for the use of the United States Army, the same doctrine is laid down. For more than two hundred years belligerents have not taken private property except for use, and then always upon payment.

It requires the greatest emergency, like a siege or something of that sort, the beleaguring of a city or fortress, to authorize a military officer to violate this rule; and the cases which we have been paying under the Bowman Act have recognized this principle, and the payments have been made under the legal fiction of an implied contract. The court has laid down in 5 Cranch the fact that the General Commanding the Army of the United States could not seize this cotton, because it would have been a violation of international law, of the laws of civilized warfare, without a special authority of Congress to do so; that Congress gave these generals authority to seize this cotton.

They sent their agents through the country, to every nook and corner, and searched it out; they brought the cotton into Federal lines; they sent it to Nashville and to Cincinnati and to New York and it was sold at auction. A part of it was sold for gold and the gold sold for a premium and was paid in the Treasury, a sum of over $2,000,000. In every instance the general sold it under the act of Congress.

Now, waiving the decision of the court, I do not believe that Senators in this Chamber will desire to put themselves in the attitude of advising any longer that this fund shall be retained in violation of the laws of civilized nations, the laws of humane warfare, the rights accorded to belligerents by the great publicists and by the example of nations.

Mr. President, not only is this true, but it is becoming expressed with more emphasis in every conference of nations on the subject of the rights of neutrals and the rights of belligerents and the rights of private parties. The United States has had the honor since it became one of the family of nations to lead in every effort that would mitigate the horrors of warfare. It has especially distinguished itself by refusing to sign the convention of Paris of 1852, for the sole reason, as expressed, that the same rule that exempted private property on land was not extended to private property at sea. With this glorious record I hope the United States will not be put in the attitude by objecting Senators of continuing a system of private seizure and plunder which is not justified by any civilized nation in the world or by any international law.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator to say that the seizures of cotton made by the Union troops during the war were contrary to the principles of international law if it was cotton which belonged to private parties.

Mr. MONEY. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator contend for that?

Mr. MONEY. I do, and I have got papers before me and the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on that.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will permit me, then I understand him to say that during the war if a Union commander knew that just beyond his lines or within his lines there were one hundred, or five hundred, or a thousand bales of cotton, notwithstanding the fact that cotton was the great source of revenue for the Confederacy, being either bought by the Confederate Government or taken by seizure or by taxation and sent abroad through the blockade, so as to give the Confederate Government money with which to purchase munitions of war in foreign parts to be brought in through the blockade—that notwithstanding that was the well-known situation, it was contrary to the laws of war as understood by the nations for the Union commander to go and seize such cotton and send it to New York or to Cincinnati and have it sold and the proceeds put into the Treasury. Does the Senator maintain that proposition in all its length and breadth?

Mr. MONEY. In answer to my friend from New Hampshire, I will say that, as is very well known to international law, there are emergencies that will warrant a commanding officer in seizing any kind of property or destroying any kind of property. He can, for instance, tear down a house that is private property which obstructs the range of a battery. He can do a great many things under an emergency, and, particularly, he can do that which the Senator has suggested. He can sap the resources of the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. Would not that destroy the Senator's proposition?

Mr. MONEY. As in the case the Senator has cited, if it was right over the line, he could make a seizure. I say he can do that, but I submit the question simply of the seizure of cotton which was abandoned by the owner or captured by force, it made no difference which, and the proceeds put in the Treasury.

Now, I desire to have read, in order to put it in a very much more authoritative manner than I could answer the question, the decision of the court of the United States; and I will ask the Secretary to read from where I have marked here in 5 Cranch, 231 United States Reports, United States vs. 1,756 shares of the capital stock of the Great Western Railroad Company of Illinois.

Mr. President, I believe, instead of reading that, I will give the substance of it. It was first declared by the court that a forfeiture of property is provided for only in case the property is employed, with the knowledge or consent of its owner, in and of insurrection. That is one answer.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the name of the case?

Mr. MONEY. It is the case in 5 Cranch, 231 United States Reports, United States vs. One thousand seven hundred and fifty-six shares of the capital stock of the Great Western Railroad Company of Illinois, but I desire to direct the attention of the Senate to this point:

> The seizure of an enemy's property by the United States as a prize of war, on land, jure belli, is not authorized by the law of nations, and can be upheld only by act of Congress.

That was the statement I made. This decision is based not only upon natural reason, but upon the example of nations; and upon this decision of the Supreme Court of the United States I stand.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to break in inopportunely on any particular point of the Senator's argument, but at some time I want to ask him a question.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator please ask now? I would just as soon have the question now.

Mr. HALE. I understand the Senator to claim that this bill should pass upon the force of decisions, perhaps the first being that of The United States vs. Klein, which took the ground that here is a fund, and that the whole question as to the disposition of that fund as affecting loyalty is settled by the general proclamation of amnesty.

Mr. MONEY. I say that.

Mr. HALE. Now, what does the Senator do with the joint resolution of March 30, 1868, which seems to have been unaccountably left out of the consideration of the courts and not even referred to; but which in terms covers all this money into the Treasury, and does not leave it as a fund. Has the Senator's attention been called to the joint resolution of March 30, 1868? I do not find in any investigation that has taken place into this question, in the arguments of counsel, or in the opinions of the courts, that any reference has been made to that joint resolution.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the Senator will read that joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. But it has been treated as a fund, when in fact it was by the terms of the joint resolution of March 30, 1868, turned into the Treasury. Here is the provision:

> That all moneys which have been received by any officer or employee of the Government, or any Department thereof, from sales of captured and abandoned property in the late insurrectionary districts, under or under color of the several acts of Congress providing for the collection and sale of such property, and which have not already been actually covered into the Treasury, shall immediately be paid into the Treasury of the United States, together with any interest which has been received or accrued thereon.

I thought it proper to call the attention of the Senator to this act, which may have escaped him.

Mr. MONEY. It has not escaped me.

Mr. HALE. But which certainly he should consider before he goes on with the treatment of the subject, and not neglect it.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will please pardon me, I have observed that; but that does not relieve the United States of its responsibility as a trustee. The decision, in the first place, was subsequent to that proclamation and subsequent to that joint resolution, and the court has decided over and over again—especially in the Padelford case, in the Armstrong case, in the Klein case, in the Wilson case, and in many others—that that amnesty proclamation absolutely reinstated every one of the disloyal owners who were excluded by the captured and abandoned property act, which left the court open to an appeal by loyal citizens of the United States in the insurrectionary States, and this amnesty proclamation came subsequent to that.

Even if that were true, and there had been no subsequent amnesty proclamation, the decisions of the court are uniform and numerous to show that such disabilities have been wiped out, and those people have become loyal in the eye of the law.

The Senator knows the short duration of the act of 1863, permitting loyal citizens to go into court and make their claims for their distributive share of this trust fund. I say "trust fund" because that is the language of the court. The language of the court is that the United States is a trustee and that there was never any intention to divest the owners of their property rights, or to deny to those who could prove their rights a day in court.

The court having decided that if that is in full force to-day, it makes no difference what has become of the property. Suppose this fund is no longer segregated as the cotton-trust fund, but has been covered into the general fund of the Treasury—I call the Senator's attention to the fact that it has been done since the date of that act by, I believe, another provision; I think, in an appropriation act subsequent to that—and that it has not affected at all the rights of the cestuy que trust, and it does not in any degree remove the responsibility of the United States as a trustee.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will pardon me just one moment, permit me to add that in the time when under the statutes the loyal claimants made their claim good in the case, as they perhaps could with the proofs furnished them from the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, millions of this money were distributed exactly as the law had intended to loyal owners, but the disloyal owners, being barred by the express terms of the act, did not bring their suits; and it is very honorable to these claimants that they did not consent to perjure themselves in order to establish claims for their own profit.

But when the Supreme Court had declared that the general amnesty had wiped out all distinction between the loyal and the disloyal, it implied a full restoration to property rights. The act had expired by limitation, and there has since been no tribunal wherein the claims of one who had been heretofore disloyal could have been presented. The object is to allow these people to go into the courts; to let them stand rehabilitated in their rights under the amnesty proclamation, so that they may go into some tribunal and present evidence of their right to their distributive share of this fund.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator in respect of a pardon or amnesty in the case of a fine which has been imposed and paid, does he believe that a pardon would restore the fine?

Mr. MONEY. Well, I will not go that far.

Mr. HALE. What I claim is that if that penalty had been completely enforced the money was not held as a fund, and months before the pardon or general amnesty was issued the whole thing had been closed and the money had been turned into the Treasury. A pardon would not affect that; a pardon could not restore that after that had been done, and general amnesty could not do that. However, I do not propose to discuss that matter.

Mr. MONEY. I will reply to the Senator right on that point, and I am very glad he has brought it up. I do not want to make a speech, but to explain this bill and to have it passed.

I am speaking for a class of people who have suffered destitution; many of them have been in poverty and have suffered for a very long while. Its effect upon them has been greater than can probably be appreciated on the other side of the Chamber. It has prevented many young men and women from having that advantage of education to which they were fairly entitled in the race of life. It has produced a condition among a certain class that has been detrimental to their elevation, their education, and their refinement; it has brought miserable consequences to those people without any fault of theirs.

I rest simply on what the Supreme Court of the United States has said. I do not go outside of the general class of cases to find exceptions. This is not a bill for exceptional cases; it is a bill for general cases, and no man can get a single dollar out of this fund, whether it be in the general fund or whether it be segregated, unless by the documents in the possession of the Secretary of the Treasury he can prove that the cotton was seized, that he was the rightful owner, that it was sold by the proper agent of the United States, and the proceeds placed in the Treasury, together with an account of the number of bales, the number of pounds, and the price paid per pound.

I say the court has determined this matter over and over again, not in the exceptional cases mentioned by my friend from Maine, but as to the general fact that restoration of the rights of those men has been absolutely accomplished by the amnesty proclamation and according to the very phrase of the amnesty proclamation itself, which was designed to restore them to their rights of property; which was designed to rehabilitate the disloyal citizen in every respect. In other words, there was not to be a particle of difference in the late insurrectionary States between the man who was loyal and the man who was disloyal, either as to civil, political, or any other rights.

I rest upon the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. It has been repeated over and over again; and, as I said at the outset, gentlemen may differ with the court as to the correctness of the decision, yet they can not differ as to what the court has actually and really held. That is what I rely upon.

Mr. President, the several points that have been raised heretofore are distinctly and succinctly stated in the Klein case——

Mr. SULLIVAN. I suggest as to one point the Senator from Maine a moment ago made, before my colleague goes on to the next point, that this property had been covered into the Treasury before the amnesty, my colleague might give the Senator the dates of the various proclamations beginning back in 1863; May, 1865; September, 1867; July, 1868, and December 25, 1868.

Mr. HALE. That is the act upon which stress is laid—the act of December, 1868.

Mr. SULLIVAN. There was more than one which gave precisely the same right, except that the act of 1868 relieved the oath. The money was covered into the Treasury on the 28th of June, 1868, and the war having ended prior to that time the rights of claimants were complete, and the money was turned over. The only trouble was that they could not go into the court, being barred by the statute of limitations.

Mr. MONEY. There has been a subsequent act to that mentioned by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], very much later on, and I believe it was in an appropriation bill. That covered this fund back into the general fund of the Treasury; but Congress could not work a forfeiture of property by law. It takes the process of the courts to say that a man can be deprived of his property. He must have due process of law; he must have his day in court. We can not seize a ship on the sea, according to international law, and condemn that ship until the case has been in the admiralty courts and adjudged a prize of war; and it is proposed now, because a resolution of Congress repealed an act heretofore passed, to take a segregated fund and put it into the general fund of the Treasury without any process of law whatever. If that can be done, any kind of property can be seized and appropriated to the use of the Government. I say that no Senator will insist upon that proposition, because it is contrary to every provision of the Constitution.

I was about to have read, Mr. President, as covering very nearly, if not completely, the decision of the court in the case of Klein, what I will send to the desk. I will ask the Senate to give their attention to the reading of this by the Secretary, because it really clears up every doubt on every point that can possibly be raised in this discussion. The argument in that case by the counsel of the Government covers everything possible, for they are generally very zealous in the defense of the public Treasury. The decision of the court was intended to eliminate every single doubt as to the right of these people to their property. I will ask the Secretary to read what I have marked on pages 3 and 4 of the report of the committee; and I hope that Senators will give their attention to that reading, because it really seems to me to make any further explanation unnecessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

1. That it was not the intention of Congress, by the enactment of that statute, that the title to property seized under it should be divested from the loyal owners.

2. That the proceeds of the property should go into the Treasury without change of ownership.

3. That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, though then hostile, might subsequently become loyal.

4. That it was for the Government itself to determine whether those proceeds should be restored to the owner or not.

5. That the President's proclamation of pardon and amnesty, with restoration of rights of property, and particularly that of July 4, 1868, was a decision on the part of the Government which decided affirmatively the right of all the owners of such property to the proceeds thereof in the Treasury; and the restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned.

6. And that "the Government constituted itself the trustee for those who by that act were declared entitled to the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, and for those whom it should thereafter recognize as entitled."

And in its opinion the court uses this language:

"That it was not the intention of Congress that the title to these proceeds should be divested absolutely out of the original owners of the property seems clear upon a comparison of different parts of the act.

"We have already seen that those articles which became by the simple fact of capture the property of the captor, as ordnance, munitions of war, and the like, or in which third parties acquired rights which might be made absolute by decree, as ships and other vessels captured as prize, were expressly excepted from the operation of the act; and it is reasonable to infer that it was the purpose of Congress that the proceeds of the property for which the special provision of the act was made should go into the Treasury without change of ownership. Certainly such was the intention in respect to the property of loyal men. That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, though then hostile, might subsequently become loyal, appears probable from the circumstances that no provision is anywhere made for confiscation of it, while there is no trace in the statute book of intention to divest ownership of private property not excepted from the effect of this act otherwise than by proceedings for confiscation.

"It is thus seen that, except as to property used in actual hostilities, as mentioned in the first section of the act of March 12, 1863, no titles were divested in the insurgent States unless in pursuance of a judgment rendered after due legal proceedings. The Government recognized to the fullest extent the humane maxims of the modern law of nations, which exempt private property of noncombatant enemies from capture as booty of war; even the law of confiscation was sparingly applied. The cases were few indeed in which the property of any not engaged in actual hostilities was subjected to seizure and sale.

"We conclude, therefore, that the title to the proceeds of the property which came to the possession of the Government by capture or abandonment, with the exceptions already noticed, was in no case divested from the original owner. It was for the Government itself to determine whether these proceeds should be restored to the owner or not. The promise of the restoration of all rights of property decided that question affirmatively as to all persons who avail themselves of the proffered pardon. * * * The restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned, on application within two years from the close of the war. It was, in fact, promised an equivalent. 'Pardon and restoration of political rights' were 'in return' for the oath and its fulfillment."

And then the court adds this strong language:

"To refuse it would be a breach of faith not less cruel and astounding than to abandon the freed people whom the Executive had promised to maintain in their freedom."

It will be observed that the court decides that the title to the proceeds of the property which come to the possession of the Government by capture or abandonment, with the exception of property used in actual hostilities, was in no case divested from the original owner.

The question therefore arises whether the Government ever determined that the proceeds of the sales of property under the captured and abandoned property acts which belonged to disloyal persons should be restored to them.

Whatever of occasion for dispute there may have been upon this question at one time, there seems to be none now.

Under the act of July, 1862, known as the confiscation act, the President was authorized at any time thereafter, by proclamation, to extend to persons who may have participated in rebellion in any State or part thereof pardon and amnesty, with such exceptions and at such time and on such conditions as he should deem expedient for the public welfare.

* * * * * * * *

Finally, on the 4th day of July, 1868, a proclamation was issued by the President extending pardon and amnesty to all, with some exceptions, who had participated in the rebellion, with restoration to all rights of property, except in slaves, and on the 25th of December, 1868, without exception, unconditionally, and without reservation. No oath was required. * * * In the language of the Supreme Court before quoted:

"The promise of the restoration of all rights of property decided that question affirmatively as to all persons who availed themselves of the proffered pardon. * * * The restoration of the proceeds of captured and abandoned property became the absolute right of the persons pardoned, on application within two years from the close of the war."

Those who had failed to avail themselves of the proffered pardon extended by the proclamations containing conditions (if there were any such) were covered and embraced by the proclamation of July 4, 1868, which extended pardon and amnesty to all, without condition, with full restoration to property rights.

And the following, taken from the decision of the Supreme Court in Padelford's case, reported in 9 Wallace:

"In the case of Garland this court held the effect of a pardon to be such 'that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense;' and in the case of Armstrong's foundry we held that the general pardon granted to him relieved him from a penalty which he had incurred to the United States. It follows that at the time of the seizure of the petitioner's property he was purged of whatever offense against the laws of the United States he had committed by the acts mentioned in the findings and relieved from any penalty which he might have incurred. It follows, further, that if the property had been seized before the oath was taken the faith of the Government was pledged to its restoration upon the taking of the oath in good faith. We can not doubt that the petitioner's right to the property in question at the time of the seizure was perfect and that it remains perfect notwithstanding the seizure.

"But it has been suggested that the property was captured in fact, if not lawfully, and that the proceeds having been paid into the Treasury of the United States, the petitioner is without remedy in the Court of Claims, unless proof is made that he gave no aid or comfort to the rebellion. The suggestion is ingenious, but we do not think it sound. The sufficient answer to it is that after the pardon no offense connected with the rebellion can be imputed to him. If in other respects the petitioner made the proof which under the act entitled him to a decree for the proceeds of his property, the law makes the proof of pardon a complete substitute for proof that he gave no aid or comfort to the rebellion.

"A different construction would, as it seems to us, defeat the manifest intent of the proclamation and of the act of Congress which authorized it. Under the proclamation and the act the Government is a trustee, holding the proceeds of the petitioner's property for his benefit; and having been fully reimbursed for all expenses incurred in that character loses nothing by the judgment, which simply awards to the petitioner what is his own."

But for the bar made by the statute of limitations of two years, it seems that all persons, loyal and those who had been disloyal, might prefer their claims to this property, and upon proof of their right to the property obtain the proceeds.

Pardon and amnesty relieved claimants of captured and abandoned property from proving their adhesion to the Government of the United States during the late war.

The following is the whole of the opinion of the court in Pargoud's case, 13 Wallace:

"We have recently decided in the case of Armstrong against the United States that the President's proclamation of December 25, 1868, granting pardon and amnesty unconditionally and without reservation to all who participated directly or indirectly in the late rebellion, relieves claimants of captured and abandoned property from proof of adhesion to the United States during the late civil war. It was therefore unnecessary to prove such adhesion or personal pardon for taking part in the rebellion against the United States. The judgment of the Court of Claims dismissing the petition is reversed."

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to call attention at this point to the dissenting opinion in that case?

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. I notice that the opinion of the court was rendered by Chief Justice Chase, who, singularly enough, while he was Secretary of the Treasury, had gathered in the proceeds of the sale of all this cotton, and as Chief Justice decided they could all be taken out of the Treasury. He gathered the money in under a law which provided that it might be restored to the loyal owners, and he decided that it could be taken out of the Treasury by disloyal owners, so far as the court could make that decision.

Mr. MONEY. There were no disloyal owners at that time.

Mr. CHANDLER. The majority opinion was presumably concurred in by Justices Nelson, Swayne, Davis, Strong, Clifford, and Field. The dissenting opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice Miller, with whom concurred Mr. Justice Bradley, and it will be found in 13 Wallace, page 148. I will not ask to have the text of the dissenting opinion inserted in the Senator's speech.

Mr. MONEY. I thank you very much.

Mr. CHANDLER. But I am sure the Senator wants a full record to go to the country with his speech.

Now, Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi will allow me a word further——

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. While the decision of the majority was binding in that case, yet the minority opinion is good enough to enable me to insist that the statute of limitations shall not be removed at the end of a third of a century.

Mr. MONEY. I am quite sure the Senator would not differ from me as to what the court has said. The Senator simply differs from the court in its opinion in this case.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think Mr. Justice Miller's opinion is a much stronger opinion than the opinion of the majority.

Mr. MONEY. I have no doubt of that, because it agrees with your opinion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I agree with it entirely.

Mr. MONEY. It makes it very strong, indeed, in the mind of the Senator from New Hampshire when the opinion agrees with the opinion of the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. With my concurrence it is very much stronger. It is good enough, at any rate, Mr. President, in view of the fact that for over a third of a century this money has not been taken out of the Treasury. In an humble and in a subordinate way I aided in caring for this fund in 1865 and 1866, and I am going to try now and see that this little portion of what is left in the Treasury shall remain there. It seems that the whole amount was $3.,000,000; that it cost $10,000,000 to get it into the Treasury, leaving $21,000,000. About $10,000,000 has already been paid out on judgments of the Court of Claims, leaving some $10,000,000; and the Senator expects to get $5,000,000 for the claimants for whom he now appeals.

If the Senator will allow me a few words more—and then I shall stop—it cost 300,000 human lives and six thousand millions of money to carry on the war for the Union. We seem to have got of all $10,000,000; and the South comes in now and wants $5,000,000 of that. It seems to me it would be a great deal more sensible at the end of the third of a century to let this little pittance of $5,000,000 be credited on the six thousand million dollars, and not now try to get the statute of limitations removed. I wish the Senator would let bygones be bygones, and let the Treasury have this little sum of money.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, certainly I have no doubt the Senator would be very much pleased to see this money remain in the Treasury, owing to the extreme poverty of this great Government. The Senator has no sympathy with the people who own this money which the Government holds as trustee; and it is a very singular fact that, having had a delay of justice for thirty-five years, we should have now a total denial of it by the Senator from New Hampshire or by anybody else. There was no laches on the part of the claimants in this matter. They have been asking all these years, and he who caused the delay should not complain of the lateness of the day.

Now, as to the singular fact that Mr. Justice Chase, who had been Secretary of the Treasury, delivered the opinion of the court which I have cited in 13 Wallace, I will say when he was Secretary of the Treasury he was an executive officer carrying out the will of Congress, which had passed the captured and abandoned property act; but he changed his character when he went upon the bench. He then had to decide what the act meant. The claimants who are now here are not disloyal, because they have been made whole and clean by the general amnesty proclamation.

It does not make a particle of difference whether this money is in a segregated fund or in a cotton fund or in the general fund. That is simply a trick of bookkeeping in the Treasury Department, and we all know it. The thing for you to consider is what the court said. Your reports show it, and every record in the Department shows it. To whom does the money belong? The courts say to those who are not disloyal, but who are loyal citizens of this country, and who have suffered for all these years because their own has been withheld, because you have refused to give them the tribunal which the courts said they ought to have to go to in order to show their right to have the proceeds of this property distributed.

If we have been doing wrong for thirty-five years, it is quite time we should turn around and retrace our steps and not say that we are going forever to be unjust to any man who is a loyal citizen to-day, whatever may have been his character before. We ought not to turn our backs upon the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States; and I am surprised that the Senator from New Hampshire should have made the argument he has. I sympathize very much with the distress of the Treasury of the United States. We are expending five or six hundred million dollars every year, and yet we want to keep this little $4,992,000 belonging to these loyal citizens in the South or to their heirs. Is that justice?

If the United States should assume the attitude in which the Senator from New Hampshire would put it, I could not better describe it than by quoting four words of Sallust's description of Catiline, in his history of the conspiracy, that he was a man profusus sui, appetens alieni—that is, a man prodigal of his own and greedy of the property of other people. I do not agree with the Senator from New Hampshire. I know that this great nation can not afford to occupy such an attitude as that.

This is a question of moral right. Can this great Government divest itself of its moral obligations? How scrupulous we are to pay all the debts we owe in dealing with the people who hold debentures of indebtedness issued to carry on that war. I want to tell the Senator from New Hampshire that my people pay taxes, too. The people of the South, these very disloyal owners, who for thirty-five years have had the courts shut against them, have been paying part of those taxes. Did they grumble? No. There has been no complaint whatever. These people have been living out of their own, because by the statute of limitations they could not go into court, although the court had decided that their rights were good and had decided that the money belonged to them; that it was never the intention at any time, even when the first act was passed, that they should be divested of their rights. All we want now is a tribunal which shall be open to them to distribute that fund. As shown by the Senator from New Hampshire, a large part, and very much the larger part, of that fund has been distributed to loyal owners, to men in the South who were loyal at the time the act was passed.

Senators, this is a matter that I do not think there can be any great debate upon. I do not see how any man with a common sense of justice can deny longer that one of our own courts shall be open to our own citizens to plead a case which the Supreme Court of the United States has already prejudged in their favor. Somebody owns that money. It is not money which belongs to the United States; and it makes no difference what fund it may be in. It is but a mere trick of bookkeeping which will not avail you in attempting to get rid of the responsibilities as trustees in this case.

Who are the claimants? They are men stricken with age and young people who have grown up without the advantages they would have had if this court had been open to them.

But unfortunately, gentlemen, the court never made a decision that loyalty need not be proven, that the defense was wiped out by the general amnesty proclamation of July, 1868, until the act had expired. No longer could a claimant file his petition, and he was debarred not because he did not have the right to go, but because you sitting in this Chamber and the other refused to open the courts to him.

Now, I will ask my friend from New Hampshire, after having used other people's money for thirty-five years, do you not think it is time you should give us a chance to go into your own courts, after the Supreme Court of the United States has said it is their money and you are simply a trustee, and thus relieve yourself of the responsibility of any longer having the custodianship of money that does not belong to you?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MONEY. Of course.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not consider it their money. It was booty.

Mr. MONEY. I understand that you disagree with the court.

Mr. CHANDLER. It was captured property, and the Congress provided what should be done with it. It provided that it should be sold and the proceeds put into the Treasury, and any man who brought his suit within two years and proved that he had not aided the rebellion could get what belonged to him; and no man was so wild in those days as to dream that the time would ever come when it would be advocated that a man might go and sue for that property and by proving that he had aided the rebellion get the proceeds of it. I am not willing that this booty of war, that captured property, shall at the end of this time be taken out of the Treasury by repealing a statute of limitations.

Mr. MONEY. I am sorry my friend has made that remark. My friend, I think, on a little opportunity would revert to the original savage. There is a strong sentiment in human nature to do that. I will get there myself some time. Originally when belligerents invaded territory they killed the people and took everything they had. Then as the people became civilized they began to save the lives and sell them as slaves, and then, as we progressed in the upward scale, we held a few of the distinguished people for ransom or a few as hostages, or something of that sort.

Then we declined to kill people, to make them slaves, or to hold them as hostages or for ransom, and we took their property. Then we said we would not take their property, that it was contrary to humanity and civilization; and that is the attitude occupied by every nation within the pale of Christendom to-day, and nobody knows it better than the Senator from New Hampshire. And yet he wants to go back some hundreds of years in the history of the human race and seize the property of noncombatants, of private persons, and make it the "spoil of his bow and spear" and take it home in triumph and keep it. These tribunals of last resort are of no account to him. His great mind takes in the situation, and he differs with the courts. He is controlled by dissenting opinions.

I do not blame him for that, because, as I said, I disagree with the courts sometimes myself; but still I yield to them. I believe their decisions must stand until they are reversed by the same authority. We know of no decision of the court that is not good and binding until the court itself has reversed it. But, now, here we are with the proceeds of this property. My friend said he does not believe it is their property, and of course he will vote according to his convictions notwithstanding the fact that this law said that there shall be standing in court for two years for the loyal owners, and then the proclamation that they are all loyal owners, and they shall be fully restored to their property. Does the Senator deny the force and effect of the general amnesty proclamation? I ask him that question.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, I do not. I will make my position distinctly understood. The Supreme Court made that decision, with the dissenting opinion. I think it was a wrong decision, but I acquiesced in it. If the owners of this property, of this cotton mainly, which was the great mainstay of the Confederacy, can get it, they may have it for all me, but I will not vote to remove the statute of limitations. I plant myself upon the statute of limitations, which has barred these men for all these years, and I say that if there ever was a case in the world where the statute of limitations should not be removed by Congress it is this. That is all my position.

Mr. MONEY. I understand the Senator's position very clearly, and of course I have no desire to ask him to abandon his well-considered grounds of objection, but nevertheless I appeal to other Senators who have not made up their minds so fixedly against the opinion of the court and so fixedly against every law of common justice, in my view of the case. I do not mean to impeach the good intentions or moral purpose and integrity of the Senator from New Hampshire, but his view is so different from mine that if I had his view, I would think I was proceeding upon that good old rule, that simple plan, "Let him take who hath the power and let him keep who can," which I do not think applies to this age of the world's development.

In 9 Wallace there is a case reported. Speaking now of this proclamation, the court says:

> Under the proclamation and the act the Government is a trustee holding the proceeds of petitioner's property for his benefit and, having been fully reimbursed for all expense incurred in that character, loses nothing by the judgment which simply awards to the petitioner what is his own.

It is difficult to use language any plainer and simpler than that. There can not be any doubt about what the court means.

Now, if there was a full restoration to all the rights of citizenship, how is it that there should be made an exception in this one case? What particular good reason is there except that you have the money? If you did not have it, you would not take it. There is not a man on the other side who would say so. If you did not have this money belonging to these claimants, who have been restored to their right of citizenship, including the right of property, there is not a man on the other side who would say take it, and yet some of you hesitate to restore it.

Mr. President, there is something in being right. It is worth something to a great nation to be right, and I want to say that one of the highest achievements in statesmanship is to keep the people whom you rule satisfied with your government; to keep them warm in their affections to your government. When the time of war comes, when the flag is insulted, when the territory is invaded, when sovereignty is questioned, then you call upon your people to rush to arms and to make all the sacrifices usual in cases of warfare, to protect the flag, to protect the integrity of the territory, to protect the national honor and its national good name. You want a people responsive to that sort of a call when the emergency comes, and you can not get it by taking what they are entitled to under the decisions of the greatest courts of the country.

It is a very light matter, you may think, but there is something in keeping the people satisfied with their Government; and the greatest trouble in this country is that the people are too easily satisfied with the Government, and that very fact is to-day liquefying the solid foundations of this Government. The people are too easily satisfied, and will not make inquiry into the manner in which their affairs are being administered and the character of the laws that are being passed. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, and we do not exercise it. I wish the people were more vigilant and less easily satisfied, at least, than they are to-day. There ought to be more inquiry into public acts.

This whole sum amounts to $4,992,000, according to the statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury. I consider that authoritative. It binds me. I am not particular about the amount, whatever it is. Whether it is $400,000, or $1,000,000, or $6,000,000, or $10,000,000 matters not. The right exists just the same. It is a difference of degree and not in kind. If they are entitled to one, they are entitled to two, if it is theirs and they can prove proprietorship. This will not impoverish this Government. Our income in three or four days amounts to enough to pay it. The income of the National Government will liquidate the whole and relieve everybody in the course of four days.

I think there ought to be at least a persuasive power in the fact that every committee in either House that has ever had this bill in its hands, or one like it, has always reported upon it favorably, and, I believe, without dissent, so far as I have observed. There may have been dissent, but I have not noticed it. At any rate it has always received the favorable report of the committee. It has been exhaustively examined, and I think one of the ablest reports that I have ever read made in either House of Congress was made from the Judiciary Committee by Judge Culberson some eight or ten years ago upon this matter, and the reading of that opinion with its citations of the decisions by the courts and its arrangement of facts should be convincing to every mind that desires to deal with it in a straightforward way. Of course, if there is a preadjudication, if gentlemen are determined that it shall not be, they will have the opportunity to record themselves so when the right time comes.

I now appeal to my friend the Senator from New Hampshire to at least let this come to a decision, not to-day, for I want everybody to be heard who desires to be heard. I want every argument advanced against this that can be put there by the ingenuity of the sophist. Everything that can be said against it I am willing to hear with patience, but I do ask that we shall not continue, as we have done for the last twenty-five years, the policy of mere delay which has been used as a club with which to brain this bill whenever it has been presented to either House of Congress. It is entitled to a settlement. The people who are here pleading for their rights are entitled to their day in court and to a judgment.

Now, we are simply to do what? Simply to open one of our own tribunals, that our own citizens may go therein by petition and prove that they own certain property in the hands of the United States which the Supreme Court of the United States has declared to be a trust fund held for their benefit alone. In respect of transferring it from one fund to another, that cuts no figure in this case at all. It does not affect the right; it does not affect the equity and good conscience of this matter. And I take it the Senate will honestly decide, whatever its decision may be, not that the war cost a great deal, not that we have held this money for thirty-five years, but whether or not the United States is morally entitled to keep the money, notwithstanding the terms of the act under which the property was seized, notwithstanding the amnesty proclamation of the President, and notwithstanding numerous and uniform decisions of their Supreme Court. That is the question to be decided.

I know that we are more or less the creatures of experience, and when a man makes a speech in the Senate nobody can tell what the propelling force is. There is a certain thing that is called building up your fences, invented, I believe, by a distinguished Senator from Ohio, where the practice of building up fences is quite common. But nevertheless, in a case of this sort, where the right of citizenship is involved, where the court has established that right, if he can make the proof necessary that he is the person who owned the property, there is a right of that citizen that we can not disregard without violating our oath of office and our own consciences.

Of course I do not mean to impeach the conscience of anybody or his motives or purpose. If a man will not agree with the United States Supreme Court, if he believes that the length of time of possession gives a moral right and title to a thing, of course he will vote against this bill. I do not expect his support, but I do ask of you that this case shall some time be decided, and if anybody adverse to the measure proposes to make a speech upon it, I ask him as a personal favor, if he wants to do so, to do it at as early a date as his convenience will permit, considering his other engagements.

I want to say to the Senate now that I shall take every opportunity to press this matter to a vote. I do not want to be importunate with the Senate; I do not want to interfere with its regular order of business or with privileged motions, but I shall ask for the consideration of this measure, perfectly willing that discussion shall continue until the speakers have exhausted the subject and themselves; but at last, in the name of these people who have so long been denied a court in which they can prove their rights, I shall ask, in common justice to them, that you will come to a decision upon this matter and either approve or reject this measure.

I hope Senators will bear in mind that I have added to the bill a new section which absolutely excludes from this court and deprives of any standing before the court any claimant to any kind of property, cotton or otherwise, except those in the particular cases mentioned—the owners of private property seized under the act of March, 1863, by order of the Government, by its regularly authorized officers, sold, and the proceeds placed in the Treasury of the United States and decided by the court to be a trust fund, held by the United States for the benefit of these owners.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, without detaining the Senate to read it, that the dissenting opinion of the court in the case of United States vs. Klein may be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. MONEY. If that is to be put in, I shall be very glad to have the opinion of the court go along with it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator to put in all that he desired of the opinion of the majority of the court.

Mr. MONEY. I only put in some excerpts from the opinion, but probably when one reads in extenso the dissenting opinion he would like to see in extenso the decision of the court.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator requests permission to insert the decision where he had the few sentences read, I shall not object.

Mr. MONEY. I ask, if the Senator is to put in the dissenting opinion, that I may put in the whole decision of the court.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the minority opinion may be printed, to which I have called attention.

Mr. MONEY. I do not think I will put in all of the decision. There are some matters which of course would not be pertinent, and I will leave those out, in order not to encumber the RECORD any further than is necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none, and the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The dissenting opinion is as follows:

Mr. Justice Miller (with whom concurred Mr. Justice Bradley), dissenting:

"I can not agree to the opinion of the court just delivered in an important matter; and I regret this the more because I do agree to the proposition that the proviso to the act of July 12, 1870, is unconstitutional, so far as it attempts to prescribe to the judiciary the effect to be given to an act of pardon or amnesty by the President. This power of pardon is confided to the President by the Constitution, and whatever may be its extent or its limits, the legislative branch of the Government can not impair its force or effect in a judicial proceeding in a constitutional court. But I have not been able to bring my mind to concur in the proposition that, under the act concerning captured and abandoned property, there remains in the former owner, who had given aid and comfort to the rebellion, any interest whatever in the property or its proceeds when it had been sold and paid into the Treasury or had been converted to the use of the public under that act.

"I must construe this act, as all others should be construed, by seeking the intention of its framers, and the intention to restore the proceeds of such property to the loyal citizen, and to transfer it absolutely to the Government in the case of those who had given active support to the rebellion, is to me too apparent to be disregarded. In the one case the Government is converted into a trustee for the former owner; in the other, it appropriates it to its own use as the property of a public enemy captured in war. Can it be inferred from anything found in the statute that Congress intended that this property should ever be restored to the disloyal? I am unable to discern any such intent. But if it did, why was not some provision made by which the title of the Government could at some time be made perfect, or that of the owner established? Some judicial proceeding for confiscation would seem to be necessary if there remains in the disloyal owner any right of interest whatever. But there is no such provision, and unless the act intended to forfeit absolutely the right of the disloyal owner, the proceeds remain in a condition where the owner can not maintain a suit for its recovery, and the United States can obtain no perfect title to it.

This statute has recently received the attentive consideration of the court in two reported cases.

In the case of The United States vs. Anderson (9 Wallace, 65) in reference to the relation of the Government to the money paid into the Treasury under this act and the difference between the property of the loyal and disloyal owner, the court uses language hardly consistent with the opinion just read. It says that Congress, in a spirit of liberality, constituted the Government a trustee for so much of this property as belonged to the faithful Southern people, and while it directed that all of it should be sold and its proceeds paid into the Treasury, gave to this class of persons an opportunity to establish their right to the proceeds. Again, it is said that "the measure, in itself a great beneficence, was practically important only in its application to the loyal Southern people, and sympathy for their situation doubtless prompted Congress to pass it."

These views had the unanimous concurrence of the court. If I understand the present opinion, however, it maintains that the Government, in taking possession of this property and selling it, became the trustee of all the former owners, whether loyal or disloyal, and holds it for the latter until pardoned by the President or until Congress orders it to be restored to him.

The other case which I refer to is that of United States vs. Padelford (9 Wallace, 531). In that case the opinion makes a labored and successful effort to show that Padelford, the owner of the property, had secured the benefit of the amnesty proclamation before the property was seized under the same statute we are now considering. And it bases the right of Padelford to recover its proceeds in the Treasury on the fact that before the capture his status as a loyal citizen had been restored, and with it all his rights of property, although he had previously given aid and comfort to the rebellion.

In this view I concurred with all my brethren. And I hold now that as long as the possession or title of property remains in that party the pardon or the amnesty remits all right in the Government to forfeit or confiscate it. But where the property has already been seized and sold, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury, and it is clear that the statute contemplates no further proceeding as necessary to divest the right of the former owner, the pardon does not and can not restore that which has thus completely passed away. And if such was not the view of the court when Padelford's case was under consideration I am at a loss to discover a reason for the extended argument in that case, in the opinion of the court, to show that he had availed himself of the amnesty before the seizure of the property. If the views now advanced are sound, it was wholly immaterial whether Padelford was pardoned before or after the seizure.

Mr. WARREN. Referring to the matter now before the Senate, it develops that there will be some differences of opinion, and that those who favor the general provisions of the bill will seek to amend it. I assume that Senators will all require the latest information that we have, and I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the latest letters, including a circular from the Treasury Department referring to this subject-matter. I desire that it may be printed in the RECORD and also as a separate miscellaneous document.

Mr. MONEY. Would it not be well also to put in the circular letter?

Mr. WARREN. I include that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the papers which he has submitted be printed as a document and also in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The papers referred to are as follows:

ABANDONED AND CAPTURED PROPERTY ACT.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS,
Washington, D. C., March 22, 1900.

DEAR SIR: As there is a bill pending in Congress to revive the abandoned and captured property act of March 12, 1863, will you please give this committee the information called for by the following questions?

What amount in the aggregate was paid into the Treasury under said act?

What amount in the aggregate has been paid or returned to claimants to said fund?

And what disposition has been made of the balance?

By doing so you will oblige,

Very respectfully, yours,

FRANCIS E. WARREN.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 28, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22d instant, in which you say that "there is a bill pending in Congress to revive the abandoned and captured property act of March 12, 1863," and you request that your committee be given the information called for by the following questions:

"What amount in the aggregate was paid into the Treasury under said act?

"What amount in the aggregate has been paid or returned to claimants to said fund?"

In answer to the first question, I have to state that the Register of the Treasury reported to the Secretary, February 4, 1888, that the receipts of the Treasury from captured and abandoned property were $26,887,584.39. There have been no receipts since that date.

It is proper to add that included in this amount are the profits on cotton purchased and sold by Treasury agents under the eighth section of the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 377), $3,444,715.14, and the premium on the gold for which this cotton was sold, $2,571,090.25, making the sum of $6,015,805.39, which was credited to the captured and abandoned property fund, although not a dollar of this amount was derived from the seizure and sale of captured and abandoned property.

In order, therefore, to arrive at the true amount derived from the sale of captured property and covered into the Treasury, this profit on the purchase of cotton under the above act should be deducted from the $26,887,584.39, which gives $20,871,779 as the true amount covered into the Treasury from the sale of captured and abandoned property.

It is also proper to add that this sum was derived from the sale of captured vessels, miscellaneous property, and cotton, and from rents, etc.

In answer to the second question I have to state that there has been paid out of this fund $10,888,314.27, as will appear from Circular No. 4, of January 9, 1900 (copy herewith). Nearly the whole of this amount was paid on cotton claims. Deduct it from the $20,871,779 found above, and there is found to be $9,983,464.73 of the fund which has not been paid out.

But you will notice from the circular that $4,991,114.81 were derived from sources other than the sale of cotton, thus leaving only $4,992,349.92 as representing the balance of the fund derived from the sale of captured and abandoned cotton.

Your attention is called to the statement in the circular that this sum about equals the amount in the fund derived from the sale of cotton which was captured after June 30, 1865, and which had been sold to the Confederate government, as shown by the Confederate records now in this Department.

Your attention is called also to Senate Ex. Doc. No. 56, Fortieth Congress, second session, page 28, from which you will see that the Secretary of the Treasury released, under the act which the bill proposes to amend, 9,556 bales of cotton and allowed claims and refunded $2,210,476.96.

You will see on page 4 of the circular a statement of the provisions of law made for the relief of all persons who claimed that their property had been unlawfully taken.

I have to state also that this captured and abandoned property fund was all carried into the general fund of the Treasury under the joint resolution approved March 30, 1868.

Respectfully,

L. J. GAGE,
Secretary.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

[Department Circular No. 4, Miscellaneous Division, 1900.]

INFORMATION RELATIVE TO COTTON AND CAPTURED PROPERTY CLAIMS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1900.

To whom it may concern:

A statement originating in Washington that there is $13,000,000 in the Treasury belonging to the cotton fund has been extensively copied in the public press, especially in the South. This publication has undoubtedly caused parties, or their descendants, who lost cotton to make inquiries. The statement is erroneous and misleading.

To correct this statement a brief review of the transactions of the Treasury would seem proper, that parties interested and the public may not be misled by unauthorized and misleading publications.

By an act approved March 12, 1863 (12 Stat., 821), the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to appoint special agents to collect captured and abandoned property in the States in insurrection. Nine districts were established and an agent appointed for each. All the property collected by them that was not returned to the owners was sold and the proceeds reported to the Secretary of the Treasury. The records show that in many cases the Secretary ordered the property collected by the agents to be restored to the owners before sale, and in other cases he returned the proceeds derived from the sale to the owners.

The Treasurer of the United States was appointed a special agent, and until March 30, 1868, was the custodian of the funds. It was treated as a trust fund under the control of the Secretary.

PROCEEDS COVERED INTO THE TREASURY.

By a joint resolution approved March 30, 1868 (15 Stat., 251), it was provided that all the moneys derived from the sale of captured and abandoned property (which included cotton), "which have not already been actually covered into the Treasury shall immediately be paid into the Treasury of the United States."

Since the passage of the joint resolution all the funds derived from the sale of captured and abandoned property have been covered into the Treasury, from which it can not be taken without an appropriation by Congress. There is, therefore, no "cotton fund" in the Treasury, carried on the books as such, nor as the "captured and abandoned property fund."

AMOUNT DERIVED FROM CAPTURED AND ABANDONED PROPERTY COVERED INTO THE TREASURY.

February 4, 1888, the Register of the Treasury reported to the Secretary that the receipts of the Treasury from captured and abandoned property were $26,887,584.39, and noted that in this amount was included $2,571,090.75 derived from premium on the sale of gold coin which had been received from the sale of cotton purchased by Treasury agents, and which was sold for gold. There have been no further amounts received from this source since the Register's report.

SOURCES FROM WHICH THE CAPTURED AND ABANDONED PROPERTY FUND WAS DERIVED.

There seems to be a general impression in the country, especially among those who claim that their cotton was taken, that the captured and abandoned property fund was all derived from the sale of cotton. It is important, therefore, to state some of the sources other than cotton from which the fund was derived.

By the terms of section 8, act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 377), the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to purchase cotton, and use the funds then already received from the sale of captured property, and not then covered into the Treasury, to pay for the cotton purchased.

The profits on this transaction were $3,444,715.14. As the cotton purchased was sold for gold and the premium on the gold (which was sold) was $2,571,090.25, the captured and abandoned property fund was increased by the transaction $6,015,805.39, which amount is included in the $26,887,084.39, supra.

SOME OTHER SOURCES OF THE FUND.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury, made to Congress May 11, 1868 (Senate Ex. Doc. No. 56, Fortieth Congress, second session), states the sources from which the receipts for captured and abandoned property were derived to that date, when the amount covered into the Treasury was $25,257,931.62. This report shows that there was received from other sources than the sale of cotton—

For miscellaneous property	$1,309,650.69
Rents	613,284.96
Sale of captured vessels, etc	1,438,526.39

Since this report was made there has been covered into the Treasury $1,629,652.77, which was derived from other sources than the sale of cotton taken from individuals. This sum, added to the $25,257,931.62, makes the $26,887,584.39 reported by the Register in 1888.

AMOUNT OF THE FUND COVERED INTO TREASURY THAT WAS RECEIVED FROM THE SALE OF INDIVIDUAL COTTON.

To determine the amount of the captured and abandoned receipts covered into the Treasury that were derived from the sale of cotton belonging to individuals there must be deducted from the total amount received from captured and abandoned property the amounts received from other sources:

Amount received and covered into the Treasury		$26,887,584.39
Deduct items found above—
Profits on cotton purchased	$3,444,715.14
Premium on gold	2,571,090.25
Miscellaneous property	1,309,650.69
Rent	613,284.96
Sale of captured vessels, etc	1,438,526.39
Amount paid in since May 11, 1868	1,629,652.77
		11,006,920.20
Leaving receipts from sale of individual cotton		15,880,664.19

Included in the amount is $4,886,671 received from the sale of cotton seized after June 30, 1865, which will be noticed further along in this report.

TREASURY PAYMENTS FOR COTTON OUT OF THIS FUND.

By the terms of section 3 of the act approved March 12, 1863 (12 Stat., 821), it was provided that "any person claiming to have been the owner of any such abandoned or captured property may, at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, prefer his claim to the proceeds thereof in the Court of Claims."

It was decided officially and afterwards judicially that the rebellion closed August 20, 1866, so that the parties had until August 20, 1868, to file their claims in the Court of Claims. Under this act a large number of claims for cotton were filed in that court and judgments rendered. It appears from the report of the Register of the Treasury, February 4, 1888, that the judgments paid amounted to $9,864,300.75. Since that date there have been paid on judgments rendered by the court and under private acts of Congress $520,700.18.

Again, under section 5, act of May 18, 1872 (17 Stat., 134), the Secretary of the Treasury returned to the owners of cotton seized unlawfully after June 30, 1865, the sum of $195,896.21.

It will thus be seen that large sums have been paid on claims for cotton under the provisions made by Congress, and these amounts should be deducted from the sum derived from its sale, in order to determine what part of the fund covered into the Treasury under the joint resolution of March 30, 1868, represents the balance derived from the sale of individual cotton.

STATEMENT.

Amount covered into the Treasury derived from sale of individual cotton		$15,880,664.19
From this amount deduct payments judgment, Court of Claims under act March 12, 1863, to February 4, 1888	$9,864,300.75
Judgments of court since February 4, 1888, and private acts of Congress	520,700.18
Disbursed as expenses under section 3, joint resolution March 30, 1868, and subsequent acts	242,140.34
Judgments against Treasury agents under act of July 27, 1868	65,276.79
Claims allowed by the Secretary under section 5, act of May 18, 1872	195,896.21
		4,992,349.92

There is, then, only $4,992,349.92 left in the Treasury which was received from the sale of captured and abandoned cotton.

COTTON SEIZED AFTER JUNE 30, 1865.

Reference has been made above to section 5, act of May 18, 1872, which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to return the proceeds derived from cotton seized after the 30th of June, 1865.

It appears from a report of the Secretary of the Treasury (Senate Ex. Doc. 23, page 58, Forty-third Congress, second session) that the proceeds derived from the sale of cotton seized unlawfully after—

June 30, 1865, amounted to	$4,886,671.00
And of this amount there was returned under act of May 18, 1872	195,896.21
Leaving covered into the Treasury from this source	4,690,774.79

There were 1,336 claims filed under the act of 1872 for 136,000 bales, of the estimated value of $13,600,000. (Letter of Secretary of Treasury, Ex. Doc. H. R., Forty-fifth Congress, second session, page 36.) As before stated, only $195,896.21 was allowed by the Secretary. The claims were nearly all disallowed, for the reason that the Confederate records in this division showed that the claimants had sold the cotton to the Confederate government, and it was not therefore individual cotton when seized after June 30, 1865, but was the property of the Confederate government.

It will be noticed that the amount received from the sale of this Confederate cotton about equals the amount of the proceeds of captured cotton which remained after the payments of the judgments, etc., as above stated.

It follows, therefore, that the balance of the fund in the Treasury received from the sale of cotton represents the proceeds of the sale of cotton that belonged to the Confederacy.

LAWS FOR THE RELIEF OF THE OWNERS OF CAPTURED AND ABANDONED PROPERTY.

It will be seen from the foregoing that ample provision was made by law for all persons who claimed that their property was unlawfully taken.

1. Until the fund was covered into the Treasury in 1868 the Secretary of the Treasury could return the property or the proceeds in all cases where a claim was substantiated by proper evidence.

2. The Court of Claims had jurisdiction for all claims filed before August 20, 1868.

3. The act of 1872 provided that claims for cotton could be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury until November, 1872.

CONFEDERATE COTTON RECORD.

The miscellaneous division has charge of all the Confederate cotton records, some of which were captured and others purchased. It appears from these records that the Confederate authorities burned much cotton to prevent it from falling into the hands of the Union forces. (See report of A. Roane, chief of the Confederate produce loan office to the Confederate secretary of the treasury, published in Mis. Doc. 190, H. R., Forty-fourth Congress, first session, p. 39. See also report of De Bow, general Confederate cotton agent for Mississippi and part of Louisiana, that cotton was destroyed by Confederate scouts.) Among the Confederate treasury records is a book containing the names of persons who had made claims on the Confederate treasury for cotton destroyed by their own forces, among whom was the President of the Confederacy, who made claim for 200 bales burned.

CLAIMS FILED WITH THE COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS, COMMONLY CALLED THE SOUTHERN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

By the terms of section 2 of an act approved March 3, 1871 (16 Stat., 524), three commissioners were appointed "to receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of such claims as shall be brought before them of those citizens who remained loyal adherents to the cause and the Government of the United States during the war, for stores or supplies taken or furnished during the rebellion for the use of the Army of the United States in States proclaimed as in insurrection against the United States."

This commission came to be known as the "Southern Claims Commission." It expired by limitation of law March 10, 1880, when its last report to Congress was made. It appears from this report that there were filed with the commission 22,298 claims, amounting to $90,258,150.44, and of this amount there was allowed $4,636,920.69.

Claimants had eight years after the passage of the law to file and perfect their claims, Congress having extended from time to time the life of the commission. It appears from the report that in 5,250 cases no evidence whatever was taken by the claimants, and their claims became barred by section 5 of the act of June 15, 1878 (20 Stat., 566). These claims are not in this Department, but remain in the files of the House of Representatives.

The creation of this commission is another evidence, in addition to those before noted, of the liberality of Congress in providing a tribunal to adjudicate the claims of loyal citizens whose property was taken by the Union forces in the States in insurrection.

The Treasury Department has now no authority to consider and settle cotton and war claims, and relief, if any, must be afforded by Congress.

H. A. TAYLOR, Assistant Secretary.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS,
Washington, D. C., April 16, 1900.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: S. 602, to revive and amend "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and acts amendatory thereof," presented by Senator DAVIS, is liable to come up at any moment for consideration.

In order to act advisedly upon this bill, I desire, for my own guidance and for the use of the Senate, certain specific data or information, and must appeal to you to have the same collated and reported at the earliest possible practicable day. You will see that this bill relates to all captured and abandoned property of all kinds, cotton as well as all other property.

Please therefore state the aggregate amounts received from the sales of all kinds of property under the following or other proper headings:

1. Aggregate amount of the proceeds of the sales of all kinds of captured and abandoned property covered into the Treasury; then, under the heading "Cotton," the aggregate amount of all sales of captured and abandoned cotton the proceeds of which were covered into the Treasury; and under the other appropriate headings the aggregate amount of the proceeds of the sales of captured vessels, rents, and other kinds of such captured and abandoned property the proceeds of which were covered into the Treasury.

Then under the head of disbursements or payments from such fund state, under the head of "Cotton," all payments specifically, including profits on cotton purchased, premium on gold, judgments, private acts, judgments against Treasury agents, claims allowed by Secretary, expenses, etc., refunds by the Secretary of the Treasury, and explain the release of 9,556 bales of cotton by the Secretary of the Treasury, as stated in your letter of March 28, 1900, to me, whether the value of this cotton was included in the amounts of the cotton fund covered into the Treasury or was released in kind and returned to claimants, and especially the amount of the captured and abandoned cotton; proceeds covered into the Treasury which was shown by the books of the Confederacy to have been bought for the Confederate government, which is an important item.

And under proper headings the disbursements and payments from the other proceeds arising from sales of other property than cotton, specifying each as far as practicable—judgments, private bills, allowances by the Departments, by the Southern Claims Commission, etc. This statement should show as accurately as possible the exact balance in the Treasury from all sales of all captured and abandoned property now in the Treasury and from which any and all judgments which might be rendered under the pending bill could be paid after all proper deductions have been made for all disbursements, payments, expenses, etc., heretofore made to this date.

With such information and data intelligent action can be taken.

Please advise me of receipt and about the time which will be necessary to enable you to make the report indicated, and oblige.

Sincerely, yours,

———

Hon. LYMAN GAGE,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., April 21, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, requesting data and information relative to the captured and abandoned property transactions of this Department for use in the consideration of Senate bill 602.

A number of very full reports have been made by former Secretaries of the Treasury on the subject, and a reference to them will doubtless furnish nearly, if not all, the data and information that you request.

To make a reexamination of all the transactions and accounts of the Treasury agents engaged in collecting and selling captured and abandoned property would require the services of a number of clerks for several months.

February 4, 1888, the Register of the Treasury reported to the Secretary that the receipts from captured and abandoned property were $26,887,584.39, of which amount $2,571,090.75 was derived from premium on gold coin.

On page 1 of House Miscellaneous Document No. 190, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, you will find the names of the persons who paid into the Treasury $24,251,269.93. Since the date of that report there has been paid in $95,610.03 by different agents. Add to these amounts the premium on gold, and the total is the same amount reported by the Register.

May 11, 1868, Secretary McCulloch made an exhaustive report—Senate Ex. Doc. No. 55, Fortieth Congress, second session. You will find on page 52 a statement of the entire receipts and disbursements of agents of the Treasury.

At that date the total amount covered into the Treasury is stated at $25,257,931.62, which is $1,629,652.77 less than the amount reported by the Register in 1888, but which was received between the two dates.

You will notice, on page 53 of the report, that $6,468,657.28 of the receipts were in gold, and that the premium on this gold was $2,571,090.95.

For data as to the amount of profit realized on cotton purchased by Treasury agents and sold under the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 377), I refer you to page 3 of House Miscellaneous Document No. 190. You will see that the amount advanced out of the fund was $2,465,883.69, and the amount returned from sales of the cotton purchased was $5,910,549.13, thus showing that the profits were $3,444,715 44.

Add this to the premium on gold, and it is found that $6,015,805.39 was credited to the fund from these two sources, which amount is included in the $26,887,084.39.

It is supposed that the bill has in view principally the payment of cotton claims, and if such is the purpose it would seem that Circular No. 4 of this Department furnishes the data which should be considered in the discussion of the question.

The amount of cotton purchased by the Confederate government may be of interest to your committee in considering the question whether the amount of the fund which represents the sale of cotton seized after June 30, 1865, should now be paid to cotton claimants.

On page 37 of Mis Doc. 190 you will see that the agent of the Confederacy reports the total amount purchased as 430,724 bales, costing $34,525,209.14.

He says that the cotton was "scattered principally on the plantations in the several States," where the larger portion, on October 30, 1864, was still located.

When the 1,336 claims were filed under the act of 1872, the Confederate records were in possession of this Department, and it was found that most of the claims were for cotton that had been sold to the Confederacy. It would seem, from the report of the Confederate agent, that the parties had received pay for it.

You request an explanation of the release of 9,556 bales of cotton referred to in Department letter of the 28th ultimo. Under the act of 1863 the Secretary of the Treasury released cotton when he was satisfied that it should not have been seized, and if the cotton had been sold he refunded the proceeds.

On page 53 of Senate Ex. Doc. No. 56 you will see that he refunded $2,460,821.60.

Your attention is called to the statement in Circular No. 4 of the provision made by law for all persons who claimed that their property was unlawfully taken, viz:

1. Until the fund was covered into the Treasury, in 1868, the Secretary of the Treasury could return the property or the proceeds in all cases where a claim was substantiated by proper evidence.

2. The Court of Claims had jurisdiction for all claims filed before August 20, 1868.

The act of 1872 provided that claims for cotton could be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury until November, 1872.

Respectfully,

L. J. GAGE,
Secretary.

HON. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON REPRESENTATIVE BAIRD.

Mr. MCENERY. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Thursday, May 10, at 3 o'clock, I will call up the House resolutions notifying the Senate of the death of the Hon. SAMUEL T. BAIRD, late a Representative in Congress from Louisiana, in order that appropriate resolutions may be presented to the Senate and considered.

JOHN F. CRAWFORD.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I desire to call up the West Virginia election case.

Mr. WARREN. Will my friend the Senator from Maryland yield to me for a moment that I may call up a House pension bill? It is very short.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 7599) granting an increase of pension to John F. Crawford.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of John F. Crawford, late a private of Company B, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I desire to call up the resolution in the case of the Senator from West Virginia.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution, reported by Mr. MCCOMAS from the Committee on Privileges and Elections March 12, 1900:

Resolved, That NATHAN B. SCOTT has been duly elected a Senator from the State of West Virginia for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1899, and that he is entitled to his seat in the Senate as such Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], which will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the resolution and report be recommitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with instructions to investigate the case fully by all legal evidence offered to it.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will yield to the junior Senator from Alabama if it is his desire to proceed.

Mr. PETTUS. I understood that the senior Senator from West Virginia had some remarks to make on this subject.

Mr. McCOMAS. I was not aware that the senior Senator from West Virginia desired to address the Senate. I understand that he does not desire to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CARTER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PETTUS. Does the senior Senator from West Virginia decline to make any further remarks?

Mr. McCOMAS. The senior Senator from West Virginia tells me he has no desire to make any remarks at this time.

Mr. PETTUS. I will proceed now, Mr. President.

I do not propose this morning to enter again into a discussion of this case in extenso. My main purpose is to get before the Senate a mistake, as I conceive it, made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] in what they had to say. I would have attempted to correct it yesterday if I had heard it with any distinctness. I happened to be out of the Chamber when a portion of it was said. I will send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read the parts of the RECORD with the cross marks.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Congressional Record, April 26, 1900, pages 4709-10.]

Mr. McCOMAS. * * * In respect of vague suggestions of wrongdoing by A or B, we asked that counsel should proffer something which would be proved by somebody, and counsel failed to make any proffer of any evidence they might offer to sustain this statement; and when they were not clear, distinct, and specific, when they declined to make any proffer whatever, the committee, with almost unanimity, said there was nothing to investigate in respect to those matters.

Mr. PETTUS. Now, from the right-hand column, the remarks made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. CHANDLER. * * * Full argument was made on those conditions; and after argument had been fully heard and the counsel had stated everything which they knew or imagined by any possibility could be proven to the committee, the committee concluded to make no further investigation, but to decide the case, as they have decided it, with one dissenting voice, upon the testimony which was then before the committee.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, the proceedings of that occasion happened to be in writing, taken down by your stenographers, and I have them before me. I propose to read from the minutes taken by the stenographers some extracts, to show that those statements are entirely mistaken. In the first place, there was a memorial presented, and in that memorial were contained copies of the depositions which had been taken in that case, and the depositions themselves were tendered to the committee and in the hands of the committee. Then Mr. Welles, who was of counsel for the contestants, after making a great many other statements as to what could be proved, said:

We want to prove those propositions. We want to prove this agreement—

Speaking of the agreement between the 5 Republicans and the 5 Democrats.

We want to prove those propositions. We want to prove that this agreement and the convention which was held under the agreement, and that all of this proceeding, including the temporary suspension of Kidd's vote (because he was not suspended from the senate, but simply suspended from voting), was a part of a fraudulent conspiracy, and that there was a condition of affairs existing in West Virginia that was as bad as the condition of affairs which unfortunately confronted the United States Senate in the days of reconstruction in the South. We want to show those facts. Those facts are not before this committee. Those are the facts on which we want some decision of the committee outlining what we can and can not prove. We do not believe this committee will decide that we can not go into motives, because that would shut out the investigation of all cases of fraud.

Now, further on in the proceedings of the same day:

The CHAIRMAN—

That is his deposition—

I have Morrow's and Fisher's. Those are referred to at page 131.

"The attorney-general's argument," in the Logan and Via case, "consisted of such ill-tempered declarations as that he charged that the committee had already agreed to decide against Via and in favor of Logan, and if they were to carry out this prearranged plan the committee need not be surprised 'to see blood flow in the capitol' on the next day, because plans had been formulated looking to the preventing of the seating of Logan, even at the cost of shedding of blood."

Morrow says the same thing. He was chairman of the special committee.

Mr. WELLES. I was mistaken about McKinney; he was not there.

The CHAIRMAN. Morrow says:

"Instead of attempting to remove this supposed prejudice by reason, he attempted to coerce the committee by threats of what would happen in case they acted in accordance with the dictates of judgment and conscience and contrary to his demands. He said, in effect, that they need not be surprised if upon the following morning blood ran in the capitol, and asserted that the plans were completed, in case the committee acted according to the evidence and not according to the intention, to organize the house of delegates that would be subservient to his will, no matter what the consequences might be."

That is Morrow, on page 70; and the request is here made by you that we take that testimony.

Senator HOAR. If you mean to say that your offer of proof is an offer to prove by witnesses what is here set forth in affidavits, that is an answer to my question.

Mr. WELLES. Our proposal is to prove all these declarations made in the memorial, and our offer of proof is not confined at all to the ex parte affidavits that we have filed. Of course, the Senate committee will very readily see that we could not ourselves subpœna the governor of the State of West Virginia, or these men. This committee can do it.

The CHAIRMAN. What deposition did you refer to besides those I have read?

Mr. WELLES. I was mistaken, Senator; I thought that Mr. McKinney had reference to that matter; but he did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Here are the affidavits which have been lodged with the committee.

Mr. WELLES. Yes; those are the ex parte affidavits. We want to go into that case simply this far: We are willing to be limited by anything the committee may deem proper in the way of the limitation of evidence. We have no desire to go into any long-continued investigation any further than the committee may deem it necessary to do so in order to get a full understanding of this case.

We are willing to make a statement of just the points we want to prove, the point of threats, the point of intimidation, the point of conspiracy and fraud throughout, and only to call those witnesses. We would want some witnesses whose affidavits we have not got, which we did not file and could not yet have filed. We want Republican affidavits. We want members of the State government over there. Upon that point we can only ask for some ruling, under any arrangement the committee may suggest, as to whether or not the committee wishes to go into the evidence in the case, and how far the committee wishes to go into it. We are perfectly willing to outline precisely what we can prove, or what we believe we can prove, by Republican and Democratic witnesses.

Now, that thing went on and it was talked about from time to time, and it finally wound up in this way:

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will now have a session with closed doors.

Mr. WELLES. Will the committee let us know its decision as soon as possible as to when we shall put in the evidence, if the committee decides to take evidence?

The CHAIRMAN. We shall let you know any conclusion we reach. We may not take the subject up to-night, but we shall let you know promptly any conclusion that we may reach.

Mr. WELLES. Does the committee want our statement filed as to what we want to prove?

The CHAIRMAN. You want to prove what is in these affidavits. We shall consider everything that is here as bearing upon the question.

The hearing (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) was closed.

I did not read the balance, because it was mainly a discussion of the questions in the cause.

Mr. MORGAN. Will my colleague allow me to inquire what paper it is he is reading from?

Mr. PETTUS. This is the minute made by the official stenographer of the proceedings of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. Is that a part of the report now before the Senate?

Mr. PETTUS. I do not know whether it is or not. It has not been specifically mentioned that I know of. But it is a part of the official proceedings of the committee reduced to writing by the stenographer at the time, and printed by order of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. If my colleague will allow me a moment, I had not supposed that there was any official paper here connected with the report except the report itself, the report of the committee and the report of the minority. Those papers have been upon our desks here; we have had access to them; and while that paper has been once or twice referred to in the debate here I had not supposed that it had any official connection with the report of the committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. It is the report of the hearing before the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it a part of the report of the committee?

Mr. McCOMAS. It is the stenographic report of the arguments of counsel made before the committee. It is not a part of the report of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it a part of the record in this case?

Mr. McCOMAS. It is the report of the oral arguments in this case upon the record in the case—the arguments of counsel, with interruptions by Senators of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. That paper, as I understand it, brings out the fact that a number of affidavits were offered there and were acted upon by the committee. Now, if that is a part of the record in this proceeding upon which the Senate is now acting, I desire, of course, to examine it in connection with the report. If it is a private paper, one intended for the information only of the members of the committee, of course we have not got anything to do with it. Yet it is referred to here and quoted from on both sides of the Chamber, by the minority and by the majority, and I merely want to know whether that paper now is to be considered as a part of the report in this case.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will say to the Senator that it is simply a stenographic report of the arguments of counsel upon the record in the case. It is no part of the report. It could not be any part of the report. We do not incorporate the arguments of attorneys to persuade the minds of the committee in the conclusions and findings of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I understand that this paper contains not only propositions of the attorneys, possibly some arguments of the attorneys, but it contains rulings of the committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. No: it does not. I will not interrupt the junior Senator from Alabama on this subject.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, this is the official record of what the committee did on that day, and contains every word, so far as I remember, that was said by anybody on that occasion.

Mr. McCOMAS. That is exactly true. I quite concur. It contains the arguments of counsel and interruptions by members of the committee.

Mr. PETTUS. It especially contains this matter of the offer to prove certain things. It was demanded by the committee, as it will be seen in other parts of it, that they should state what they wanted to prove, and they did state what they wanted to prove; and the chairman of the committee in winding up did not speak of anything but the depositions, or the affidavits, he calls them.

You want to prove what is in these affidavits. We shall consider everything that is here as bearing upon the question.

And then the committee went into secret session.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, if my colleague will indulge me a second, I wish to say, if that committee did consider those affidavits, as they said they would, then those affidavits are a part of the record and ought to be before the Senate; and the paper that is here now ought to be printed for the use of the Senate as a part of this official proceeding. Whenever that is done I shall insist that those affidavits which were considered by the committee and passed upon by the committee are a part of what was done by that committee, and that the Senate has a right to resort to them for argument or whatever information they contain.

Mr. PETTUS. In one respect the Senator from Alabama is mistaken, because, although the chairman assured counsel, as I have read, at the conclusion of the day's proceedings that these depositions would be considered, the committee excluded them and decided that they would not consider them.

Mr. MORGAN. I just want to know what they are.

Mr. PETTUS. They are here as a part of the proceedings before the committee, in the memorial, as it is called, to the Senate by 49 members of the legislature, one of them a Republican.

Mr. TURNER. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. TURNER. Did the committee, after having assured the counsel that the affidavits would be considered and afterwards declined to consider them, then give counsel any opportunity to supply the proof in any other way?

Mr. PETTUS. They did not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2355) in relation to the suppression of insurrection in, and to the government of, the Philippine Islands, ceded by Spain to the United States by the treaty concluded in Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask——

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside without prejudice.

Mr. SPOONER. I was about to make that request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I never asserted that the committee decided in the presence of counsel or otherwise that these depositions should be read. My assertion was, and it is here on the record, that the chairman of the committee made the assurance in the presence of the committee and at the time of the adjournment. The committee for itself (the chairman, you know, sometimes says things that he is not authorized to say; it very often happens) finally decided that they would not examine these papers. I suppose—in fact, I know—that the whole idea was that there was nothing in them worthy of consideration. That is the amount of it.

But, Mr. President, in the record here was a piece of testimony I did not allude to yesterday. I intend to call it to your attention this morning. I will say that it was officially stated by the attorney-general—no, I had better read it exactly out of the proof itself. I am merely stating now what the chairman read out of one of these affidavits:

The attorney-general's argument consisted of such ill-tempered declarations as that he charged that the committee had already agreed to decide against Via in favor of Logan, and if they were to carry out this prearranged plan, the committee need not be surprised "to see blood flow in the capitol" on the next day—because plans had been formulated looking to the preventing of the seating of Logan, even at the cost of shedding of blood.

Why?

Well, it does look to me like that was one circumstance that ought to have been looked at, at all events. And further—

Instead of attempting to remove this supposed prejudice by reason, he attempted to coerce the committee by threats of what would happen in case they acted in accordance with the dictates of judgment and conscience and contrary to his demands. He said, in effect, that they need not be surprised if upon the following morning blood ran in the capitol, and asserted that the plans were completed, in case the committee acted according to the evidence and not according to the intention, to organize the house of delegates that would be subservient to his will, no matter what the consequences might be.

There are two distinct threats, proved by two distinct witnesses, made by the attorney-general of the State of West Virginia to a committee of that house sitting on the trial as you are sitting, in the trial of a contested-election case. Now, that would be a very pretty sentence for some Senator to get up here and repeat in reference to this case. But there it is.

But now, Mr. President, there is another matter that I omitted yesterday that I desire to read, and I will read it from this same book, as I have it here:

There is in the record itself a letter from one of the delegates—

A Republican—

to his wife showing that that was the intention—

That is, to break up the legislature—

unless by some means they could obtain a majority sufficient to elect NATHAN B. SCOTT. They already had a majority sufficient to elect a Republican Senator if he could get the entire votes of his party; but unless they could get a majority sufficient to elect NATHAN B. SCOTT they would organize a rump house. They would first turn out our hold-over senators and then organize a rump legislature and throw the State into anarchy and confusion; and they claimed that they would be backed in that by the State militia and by the organized government of the State.

That letter came into the possession of the Democrats, and they used it in this matter. There is no dispute about the writing at all. The member himself who wrote the letter got up and claimed as a breach of privilege that some man had taken his letter and carried it off. There is no dispute about the letter at all.

Well, that is one of the things this gentleman proposes to prove, and yet Senators tell us that they considered all these propositions and there was no offer of any evidence.

Now, Mr. President, I will make a few more remarks in reference to the other parts of this evidence, simply by way of recapitulation.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. TURNER. There is one phase of this case I should like to have some information on, if it will not interrupt the Senator. I know nothing about the case except from the memorial which was presented to the Senate at the beginning of the present session by a majority of the members of the legislature of West Virginia. I remember it was alleged in that memorial, as to the agreement made between the two parties setting aside two members of the legislature and disallowing their votes in the joint convention, that those two members were present in the joint convention and that their names were not called under this agreement, and that if they had been counted as members of the joint convention, Mr. SCOTT would not have received a majority of the joint convention. I should like to ask whether the record discloses what the facts are in that respect; and if so, what the facts are?

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, the record does show exactly what the Senator from Washington has stated, and it proves it, I might say, mathematically. That was all gone over yesterday. This Via and Logan contest was decided in the house. There was another proceeding in the house in the case of Brohard and Dent. By this agreement Brohard and Dent were both suspended. They were not expelled. They did not decide who was entitled to a seat, but they were both suspended. In the senate there were three or four resolutions, three that I remember distinctly, to unseat certain senators whose seats were contested on that day; that is, about the 20th day of January. The election was to come on in the separate houses on the 24th and in the joint convention on the 25th. These resolutions were offered. They were offered really on the 23d, but they have got a mark on them of the clerk filed on the 20th. The proposition in these resolutions was not to suspend these two men, but just merely to give the other man the seat.

One of these resolutions included a man named Kidd, a senator, who had been duly elected, had his regular credentials, had been put on the rolls by the secretary of state, who himself was chairman of the Republican executive committee of the State of West Virginia, and had been regularly sworn in. The resolution as originally offered was that Kidd was not elected, but Morris was, and must take the seat and be sworn in. That resolution was never in that form acted on. But when it came up on the 24th day of January Mr. Smith offered a substitute, which was read in full here yesterday. The effect of that resolution was to suspend Kidd and Morris both, Morris having no vote and Brohard having no vote. Both were suspended—well, they did not say until after the Senatorial election, but they were suspended until the 7th day of February, on which day it was resolved that that resolution should be acted upon. So one Democrat in the house and one Democrat in the senate were suspended from the exercise of their function as members of that legislature.

Mr. TURNER. That was done not by resolution but by agreement, was it not?

Mr. PETTUS. It was done by resolution first.

Mr. MORGAN. By agreement first?

Mr. PETTUS. No, sir; it was done by resolution first, as to Kidd. But the resolution I speak of was that Kidd should be suspended and that Morris should take his seat and vote; and he did take his seat and voted on the 24th, when the separate houses voted. It was in that state of affairs as to Kidd when this agreement between 5 Democrats and 5 Republicans was made.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, if I understand my colleague, Morris had been sworn in and had been seated as senator.

Mr. PETTUS. Pro hac vice.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, he had been sworn in.

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir; and had his seat.

Mr. MORGAN. And had his seat.

Mr. PETTUS. And voted on the 24th.

Mr. MORGAN. And thereupon Kidd was sworn in?

Mr. PETTUS. Oh, no; Kidd had been sworn in when the legislature met.

Mr. MORGAN. Very good. Then I have got them reversed. Kidd had been sworn in and had taken his seat, and thereupon Morris was sworn in and Kidd was suspended.

Mr. PETTUS. No, sir; Morris was sworn in to occupy Kidd's seat.

Mr. MORGAN. And they were both suspended.

Mr. PETTUS. That was by the agreement afterwards. You confound the agreement that was made on the night of the 24th with the action of the senate on the morning of the 24th.

Mr. TURNER. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. TURNER. After Morris was sworn in, then, was not this agreement made between the committee of five of each party, that both Morris and Dent should not be permitted to vote in joint convention?

Mr. PETTUS. That is correct.

Mr. TURNER. But they were there in the joint convention; and if they had been counted as members of the joint convention, there would not have been a majority for Mr. SCOTT?

Mr. PETTUS. That is true.

Mr. TURNER. There was an agreement, to which these members were not parties, whereby they were denied their right to vote. So, although they were present in the convention, their names were not called and they did not vote, but counting them there would not have been a majority cast for Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. PETTUS. But for that agreement or the simple suspension of Kidd. If neither of those things had taken place, SCOTT could not have been elected. If only one of them had taken place, then it would have been a tie. SCOTT was declared elected by one vote and one vote only, and the votes are given and the names of the parties are given.

Now, the Senator asked me if Kidd and Dent were present at the joint meeting of the two houses. If you will allow me to speak from the sworn statements of Kidd and Dent themselves and others in the shape of affidavits that the committee would not receive, they were both present and both wanted to vote against SCOTT. The original depositions are in the committee room, and here are copies of them.

Mr. TURNER. That is shown by the affidavits which the chairman said would be considered.

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir. That was shown by the affidavits that the chairman informed Mr. Welles would be considered. Those facts are shown there. In other words, but for the fraudulent conduct of the senate of the State of West Virginia Mr. SCOTT could not have been elected at all. They had a majority of 1, counting all the Republicans, but Mr. Haptonstal, of the house, a Republican, would not vote for Mr. SCOTT, did not vote for Mr. SCOTT, and joined in this protest to the effect that that election was a fraud on the people. Suppose Dent and Kidd had not been suspended by this agreement. They were there in the joint convention ready to vote, but by the resolution in each of the houses they were suspended.

Senators may think there is no fraud in that, but how a man who is reared in a Christian country, even without education, could think it was not fraudulent seems to me a miracle. Mr. SCOTT got his seat by the fraudulent performance of the senate of West Virginia, backed up by the governor and the attorney-general with this threat of violence to the house of representatives, with a threat of bloodshed, with a threat that the militia would be called out and that the house of representatives would be broken up and a new house ordered or formed. The attorney-general made all these threats and said he was backed up by the authority of the government and the militia would be called out to enforce it.

Well, the Democrats yielded to the pressure and made this agreement, which has been read, and the agreement, if it had been really interpreted as the witnesses all swore that it was known to all men at the time the agreement was signed, would amount to this: "Resolved, That we let Mr. SCOTT be elected, but you must put our honest members back here in their seats after it is over." And they were put back.

There was a contest pending, which was inaugurated on the 23d, the day before the voting was commenced, against Mr. Kidd. That is, I say it was inaugurated so far as it was called to the senate's attention, but it had on it a mark of the clerk, "filed on the 20th." That man was suspended by the action of the senate before this agreement was ever heard of. But it had been talked about. The threats were made—made by officials, not by just one man. The history of the whole transaction is given in this letter of which I have been speaking, of the man to his wife. They wanted to examine him. He could give a history of the whole transaction, and he was distressed to death that they had got into that fix, but he said that they had resolved to elect Mr. SCOTT anyhow, and that they would turn out all the newly elected senators, and they would have a rump house, and how they would get the rump house, how they would govern, with the militia to enforce the law. He was quite sorry that they were getting into that dreadful condition. That is what they determined upon. Senators, if that is no fraud, if a man who was born within a thousand miles of a Christian country can say that that is no fraud, we are in a dreadfully bad fix. That is all I have to say.

There is one remark I wish to make on the law of the case before I sit down. Senators do not seem to comprehend, and if they do comprehend they do not seem to be willing to acknowledge that they comprehended, a distinction between a judgment of either house as to whether a certain man was elected or not elected, and a mere suspension of a regular member to answer a particular purpose. Of course the senate of West Virginia is the judge of the election and qualifications of its own members. That is the law all over the United States, so far as I know. That is the law here, if we would exercise it. But judge, mind you, of what? Of the election and qualifications of its own members. That is what it is the judge of. They are expressly prohibited from expelling a member, except for misconduct and on a two-thirds vote.

Of course we all know that in such cases, where the house in the legislature acts upon a contest, hears the evidence, and decides in favor of one or the other, that as a general rule is conclusive afterwards, provided always that fraud does not intervene to destroy the vitality of the proceedings. That has been the exception. It has been the exception that was founded away back when our ancestors were first framing their laws in England. It never was decided, and it never can be decided by a reasonable court or by a reasonable legislative body that fraud can not vitiate a proceeding in a State legislature. There never was such a decision. On the contrary, it is decided the other way. I would just appeal to these gentlemen to discuss that case to-morrow.

Mr. President, here was no judgment rendered by the senate of West Virginia on the qualifications of Kidd, on the election of Kidd; on the qualifications of Morris, on the election of Morris. No such proceeding was ever had. This proceeding on the 24th of the month, in the morning before the legislature voted on the Senatorship, was that Kidd should be suspended and that Morris should take his seat pending the contest, and that the contest was postponed indefinitely. There was no time whatever fixed for it to be considered.

Now, do Senators tell me that that is a judgment of the senate as to either the election or the qualifications of either of those men? It was not so. No lawyer can ever torture his mind into the belief that that was a judgment on either the election or the qualifications of either of those men. One is suspended and the other is to take his seat until after Mr. SCOTT is elected United States Senator. That very proceeding of the senate, as is proved in these depositions beyond all controversy, produced that agreement, together with the threats that had been made by officials and which had been communicated to everybody, and proved to have been made by officials themselves.

The attorney-general ought to be able to speak for the governor, especially after the governor had started this fraud himself, and he asserted that he would do all these things: that blood would flow; that they had made their plans to prevent the seating of Logan at the cost of shedding blood, and that the government—he did not say the governor, according to the testimony—would sustain what they were doing and he would sustain it by calling out the militia to enforce their orders, and they would break up the house and make a rump house for the purpose of electing Mr. SCOTT. That is the amount of it.

Senators say, Oh, well, that is mere rumor. Rumor! It is a rumor which is declared by the attorney-general of the State in the presence of a sworn committee of the house of representatives and proved mathematically by two of its members.

Mr. President, the distinction, in a lawyer's mind, is just as clear as noonday that while the senate of West Virginia could determine on the election and qualifications of its members, it had no earthly power, to say nothing about right, to suspend a man temporarily for such a fraudulent purpose. It was just brute force of numbers, backed up by the governor and his militia, and his blood-thirsty attorney-general.

Mr. President, I have said all that I ought to say on this subject. If Senators want the law and want the authorities on this subject, they can find them all collected in the argument of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] in the Du Pont case.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, if the facts are as stated by the junior Senator from Alabama concerning the agreement to deny to two recognized members of the legislature the right to vote in joint convention, I am surprised at the report of the committee in favor of Mr. SCOTT. It seems to me it presents a question here which does not go back of the reorganization of the legislature, but one which raises the question whether Mr. SCOTT actually received votes enough in the joint convention to elect him a member of this body.

If it be true that the balance of the members of the legislature agreed that two of the legally admitted members should not vote in the joint convention; if it be true that they were present in the joint convention; that their names were not called by virtue of this agreement, and that if their names had been called and they had voted against Mr. SCOTT he would not have had a majority of the joint convention, then, in my view, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, he was never elected a member of this body.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator from Washington allow me just there to shorten his discussion on that point?

Mr. TURNER. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. The sitting member in the senate was Morris, a Republican, who had been given the seat formerly held by Kidd, a Democrat; and the sitting member in the house was Brohard, a Republican. His seat was contested by Dent, a Democrat. Had there been no agreement and had Brohard and Morris voted it would have added two Republican votes. Had Kidd been allowed to be reinstated in the senate and Brohard to remain where he was, it would have been one Republican against one Democratic vote; so none of the things the Senator from Washington has stated could possibly have happened.

Mr. TURNER. How does the Senator know that they would have voted for SCOTT?

Mr. McCOMAS. Because Mr. Brohard said he would vote for SCOTT and because Morris did vote for SCOTT the day before.

Mr. TURNER. The day before.

Mr. McCOMAS. And intended to vote again until stopped by this agreement. The agreement did not stop anybody, in fact, but the formal and solemn resolution of a majority of the senate and a majority of the house—not only a majority, but the unanimous vote of the senate and house—acted upon the right of these two parties to vote in the joint convention or in the proceedings of the house to which either of them belonged.

Mr. TURNER. Will the Senator state how and where Brohard stated he would vote for SCOTT?

Mr. McCOMAS. Brohard?

Mr. TURNER. Where did he state that he would vote for SCOTT? How and when did he so state?

Mr. McCOMAS. He stated it frequently and to many persons.

Mr. TURNER. That is hearsay, is it?

Mr. McCOMAS. That is the statement, which was made to many people.

Mr. TURNER. Is there anything in the record here to show how Morris and Brohard would have voted?

Mr. McCOMAS. The journal shows not only how Morris would vote, but how he did vote.

Mr. TURNER. Oh!

Mr. McCOMAS. He cast his vote for SCOTT the day before.

Mr. TURNER. Do you not think he might have changed his mind between the day before and the day he was denied the right to vote?

Mr. McCOMAS. He might have changed his mind, and so might everyone who voted for McGraw. You understand that Mr. McGraw was the Democrat caucus nominee and Mr. SCOTT was the Republican caucus nominee. Mr. Morris had voted for Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Brohard would have voted for him. Mr. Dent, if he had been seated (he was simply a contestant, claiming the seat of Mr. Brohard, who was a Republican, elected by 81 majority) in the place to which apparently Brohard was elected, he would probably have voted for the caucus nominee. I do not doubt it. But at the time of the election the result would have been two votes for SCOTT; in any attitude, one for SCOTT and one for McGraw, and the result would not have been changed. It would have been inconsequent in respect of the final vote.

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator from Washington allow me? The Senator from Maryland ought not to have stated the facts that way. The truth is on the record, and I speak now by the record of the legislature itself, what are called the "journals." The Senator from Maryland says Morris had a seat already before the agreement was made. To be sure he had, but how did he get it? He got it on the morning of the 24th, by a resolution suspending Kidd and putting Morris in his place on the day after the contest was presented to the senate, though it was marked "Filed on the 20th." That is the way Morris got his seat. The Senator from Maryland ought not to have said Morris was already seated. He was seated, but he was seated by this damnable resolution that I have been talking about.

There is one thing about which I did not inform the Senator from Washington while I was up. The senate, two-thirds Republican, on the seventh day, the day appointed for the trial of this case, and after Mr. SCOTT was elected and after the fraud and they had got all the benefits of the fraud, acted upon the case of Morris and Kidd. They had not taken one particle of testimony from the time this agreement was made, except that they had counted some votes that the committee already had in their possession, and the senate of the State of West Virginia unanimously resolved that Kidd was entitled to his seat. They did not even go through the form of swearing him over again; he was merely suspended anyway.

Now, as to the proceeding in the house. The committee had investigated that case thoroughly. Neither of those men had their seats. One of them had a false certificate; I mean by that that he was fraudulently put upon the roll of members. Neither of them had a certificate, except from one of the returning board. Each one had a certificate from one member of the board. It had to be made by two, there being three members of the board. The house has gone into that case.

At first they had refused to seat either one of those men on the ground that they had no certificate; but they had gone into the transaction, had thoroughly investigated it, and the committee had reported to the house that Mr. Dent was elected and that Mr. Brohard was not elected; and it was ready to be voted on. All the forms had been gone through, all of the evidence that had been offered was taken, and the house would have voted on that resolution on the 24th day of January. That is another point, I would say to the Senator. So the Senator from Maryland ought never to have said that Mr. SCOTT would get the vote of Morris anyhow. He got the vote of Morris on the 24th, and both of these Democrats were suspended by the agreement on the night of the 24th.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I do not think the Senate can act upon such evidence as the Senator from Maryland offers us here as to the way in which these members who were excluded would have voted. I do not think the fact that Morris voted for SCOTT on the 24th is evidence to the Senate that he would have voted for him on the 25th. It is no evidence of that fact at all. I do not think the fact that Brohard may have stated to individuals on the streets that he would have voted for SCOTT is any evidence of that fact here. Certainly both of the evidences on which the Senator from Maryland relies are very flimsy. If this case is to be made to depend upon a question as to how the excluded members would have voted, we ought to have better evidence than that which the Senator from Maryland presents. But I do not think we can have any evidence on that subject.

The facts appear to me to raise a plain legal proposition here which bars Mr. SCOTT; that is, that by private agreement between the other members of the legislature two members of the legislature, who were recognized as such by both houses, were excluded from their right to vote in joint convention. They were in joint convention, and their names were not called to vote for Senator on that day, and counting them as members of the joint convention, Mr. SCOTT did not have a majority of all the members of the joint convention.

Now, the act of 1866 requires that at this joint convention a majority of all the members then present shall vote for the successful candidate in order to insure his election. The matter is regulated by section 15 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. After providing for the balloting in the respective houses, it provides:

> At 12 o'clock meridian of the day following that on which proceedings are required to take place as aforesaid, the members of the two houses shall convene in joint assembly, and the journal of each house shall then be read, and if the same person has received a majority of all the votes in each house, he shall be declared duly elected Senator. But if the same person has not received a majority of the votes in each house, or if either house has failed to take proceedings as required by this section, the joint assembly shall then proceed to choose, by a viva voce vote of each member present, a person for Senator, and the person who receives a majority of all the votes of the joint assembly, a majority of all the members elected to both houses being present and voting, shall be declared duly elected.

If the facts are as stated by the Senator from Alabama, in which the Senator from Maryland concurs apparently, then it is evident that there is a record here which shows that Mr. SCOTT did not on this day receive a majority of the votes of all the members of the legislature then in joint convention. It seems to me that we can not afford to adopt a resolution declaring that a man can be elected to this body under these circumstances.

A similar case would be if a close question were pending in this body on the passage of a bill, and the members of the Senate, for some reason or other, should agree that I or some other member should not be permitted to vote on that question, and the yeas and nays were taken, and under that agreement the presiding officer declined to have my name called, and by reason of the failure to call my name a majority was apparently registered in favor of the proposed law. Would it be contended by anybody that a law could be passed in this body in that manner? And when it requires a majority of all the members of the legislature in joint convention to elect a Senator, can it be said that all of the members of the legislature except two shall rule out those two in order to accomplish an election?

That is the square legal proposition presented here. I have not heard it discussed by anybody in this debate. The members appear to have gone off on the proposition that this was an attempt to overturn the organization of the legislature and to overrule the decision in the Turpie case. Certain features may present that question, but this case is not at all analogous to the Turpie case. I do not understand that it has ever been decided in this body. I do not understand that such an extraordinary condition of affairs has ever been presented to this body in the election of a Senator.

Instead of overturning the organization of the legislature, this proposition recognizes the organization of the legislature, recognizes all of the members who were declared elected by the two houses of the legislature, and makes the test of Mr. SCOTT'S right to a seat in this body to depend upon an examination of the question whether he did in fact receive a majority of all the votes of the legally recognized members of the legislature then sitting in joint convention. It appears to be granted on both sides that he did not so receive those votes, because a majority of the legislature had determined that certain members should not have the right to vote in this joint convention.

I say that this proposition can not be wiped away by the Senator from Maryland getting up and saying that Morris would have voted for SCOTT if he had been permitted to vote, because there is only one way of determining how Morris would have voted, and that would have been by calling his name and permitting him to vote in the joint convention; and the same thing may be said with reference to Brohard.

I do not think this is a technical question. I think it is one which ought to appeal to every Senator, especially in view of the other facts in this case, which show a condition of duplicity and double dealing and fraud in connection with the organization of the legislature which would justify the Senate in seizing hold of any legal ground to say that there had been no election and to send the matter back in order to enable the legislature of West Virginia to elect a member to the Senate in a proper, legal, and constitutional manner.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I am led to say something more in this case by the remarks of the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], made yesterday. I asked him whether he thought the decision in the case of Mr. Turpie was sound or unsound, right or wrong. I understood the Senator—I am sorry he is not now in his seat—to say impliedly, if not directly, that he thought the decision was wrong. If that is correct, there is an important question now before the Senate. Ever since that decision was rendered it has been understood that it governed the Senate. It has governed the Senate. It has influenced the decisions of the Committee on Privileges and Elections upon cases before it.

In order not to do the senior Senator from Alabama any injustice I will read what he said. I asked him:

> I should like him to be specific as to whether he holds that the report and the decision in the Turpie case were erroneous or not, because there the attempt was to assail the decision of the Indiana legislature in two cases for fraud.
> Mr. MORGAN. I have not looked at that case lately, but as the Senator puts his question to me, I feel an old impression creeping over me that I did not think it was right.
> Mr. ELKINS. But you voted for it.
> Mr. MORGAN. Nothing is right in the sight of the American people or the Senate of the United States which forms a technicality to hold the truth in chains. Nothing is right which foists a falsehood upon the Senate. Although it may be done under the strictest formalities of a record and under seal, it is not right. The Senate ought always to feel that it has the power to break away from the false device and fasten its judgment upon the solid foundation of truth. It ought always to feel that way.

That is about as direct an answer as the senior Senator from Alabama ever gives to any question, and I feel justified in interpreting it to mean that the decision in the Turpie case was erroneous.

Mr. President, you will remember that in May, 1888, I questioned the report in that case. The Senate was asked then to assent to a very positive proposition of law, which is to be found in the debate at that time. It is also to be found in the report of the Senator from Maryland in this case of Mr. SCOTT. It was read to counsel in the Scott case when they were arguing before the committee.

> The CHAIRMAN. Let me read what they offered to prove in the Turpie case:
> "That before said alleged election the senate wrongfully, and for the purpose of obtaining a majority for said Turpie in said joint convention, declared two members who had been duly and lawfully elected members thereof not entitled to their seats, and declared two other persons who had not been duly and lawfully elected to be entitled to such seats, and thereupon seated such persons, and that this was done without right, without evidence, and without hearing or debate, and that said persons so seated thereafter were present and voted for Mr. Turpie in said convention, and that without such votes said Turpie would not have received a majority."
> I think that took place only a day or two before the Senatorial election.
> Senator HOAR. Yes; I myself wrote the report.
> Mr. ST. CLAIR—
> Mr. St. Clair was the counsel arguing the case—
> I will only say that I am a pretty good State rights man, but I would never vote for that proposition of law.

When there was before the Senate Mr. HOAR'S report, which was unanimously adopted by the Senate, declaring that Senator Turpie should not be disturbed in his seat, I thought that was a very doubtful legal proposition, and I raised the question whether, if the turning out of members of a legislature because of their politics, and the seating of other men because of their politics, were in such close proximity to the Senatorial election that the acts could be fairly treated as a part of that election, and if it appeared on the whole to the Senate that these acts were not a bona fide exercise of the right on the part of one of the branches of the State legislature to decide upon the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, the Senate was not bound to go beyond the decision of the legislature and to inquire into and judge concerning this unseating of members and seating of other members, as being a part, under the circumstances, of the Senatorial election; and my dissent there stands of record. But there was no one to sustain me. I entered only my personal dissent. The report was unanimously adopted by the Senate, and, as I have said, it has governed the action of the Senate and the action of the Committee on Privileges and Elections ever since that time.

Mr. President, if the senior Senator from Alabama represents the other side of the Chamber, and if he really means that in the interest of the assertion of Federal power against the State legislatures he is willing to cancel and wipe out the doctrine of the Turpie case, then I say I will join with him in his attempt. I am willing, in the interest of the national power, the power of the National Senate, in a case of this kind, to reopen this case. I think Senator SCOTT can stand upon the facts; and if the Senate of the United States, upon this report and upon the motion of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], wishes to assert the right of the Senate of the United States to reverse the deliberate judgment of the two houses of the West Virginia legislature as to the rights of Kidd and Brohard in the senatorial election, I personally am willing to join in the act if the facts warrant it. But before voting I wish to understand what are the views of the Senators upon the other side of this Chamber.

Mr. STEWART. The statement of the Senator from Washington has rather confused me. I want to know the facts. Is it a fact that two members of the legislature, who had been seated and recognized as such, were not allowed to vote, although present at the joint meeting; that their names were omitted and not called, although they had been recognized and seated as members? I understand that to be the substance of the statement of the Senator from Washington. I should like to know the exact facts in the matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. When I argue a question of law, some Senator wants to know something about the facts, and when I argue a question of fact some Senator interrupts and wants to know about a question of law. I will answer the Senator briefly before I get through, but my mind is now looking in a different direction.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. CHANDLER. If this law of the Senate in the Turpie case, which is very strong law, which was a hard dose for me to take, which I, like the senior Senator from Alabama, have been groaning under ever since, is to be reversed in the Senate, I am ready for it.

Mr. President, there was a contest suggested here against the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD] whom I now see in his seat, but the law in the Turpie case governed the committee, and no steps ever were taken to make an investigation of the Senator's case. There was a contest suggested in reference to the seat of the present Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY], but the case was deemed by the committee to be within the decision of the Turpie case. Nothing was done about it.

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Was there in any one of those cases a case where a member was suspended?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will answer the question of the Senator from Nevada and the question of the junior Senator from Alabama before I get through.

In 1896 there was an attempt made in this body—and the motion was not made by a Republican Senator—to investigate the right to a seat here of the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr.

MORGAN], not now present, the Senator who is in favor of tearing down this doctrine in the Turpie case. The resolution to make the investigation went to the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The committee reported that there ought to be an investigation; that we ought to inquire whether there was a legal legislature in the State of Alabama which had a right to elect the senior Senator from the State of Alabama. There was a long minority report made against right of inquiry, and it was signed by Senator Gray, of Delaware; Senator Pugh, of Alabama; Senator Turpie, of Indiana, and Senator Palmer, of Illinois; and they planted themselves upon the doctrine that it was not for the Senate of the United States to undertake to make an inquiry and reverse the decisions, the findings, and the conclusions of a State legislature. We did not succeed in even getting a vote of the Senate upon that resolution to make an investigation into the right of the senior Senator from Alabama to hold a seat in this body.

In the next Senate will be considered the credentials of ex-Senator Blackburn, who has been elected to the Senate by the legislature of Kentucky; and if the doctrine in the Turpie case is to be overruled, then it will be the duty of the Senate to inquire whether Kentucky had a legislature that was competent to elect Senator Blackburn. The Senate will be asked to go into the question whether it will reverse the decisions as to its membership of the legislature of Kentucky.

This whole field will be open. The whole question whether Federal power as exercised by the National Senate is competent to reverse the decision as to its membership of State legislatures will be reopened, and we shall not know until there has been discussion over and over again of this question what the rule of the American Senate is. I say very frankly that I for one am willing to reopen that question. I think the decision in the Turpie case went very far when it was held that we would not make inquiry if a legislature the day before a Senatorial election deliberately, as the decision said, without right, without proof, without debate, turned out two Republicans and seated two Democrats, and the next day Senator Turpie was elected by two majority.

That decision was a hard decision, an extreme decision in favor of the power of a State legislature, an extreme decision against the power of the Senate; and I shall be very willing myself, personally, if Senators upon the other side of the Chamber so demand, to reopen that question and make an investigation in the West Virginia case and see what the law is, and learn whether it is law which applies to all men alike who come here with credentials—to Democrats who come here elected by their legislatures, and to Republicans who come here elected by their legislatures.

That is all I have to say on the point. If Senators will frankly declare that they wish to reopen this case for the purpose of contesting the law in the Turpie case and having it reversed, and having a new rule established for the government of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I shall be very glad to join them.

In this case, Mr. President, there is no doubt what the facts are. The two branches of the West Virginia legislature reached decisions. The senate decided that Mr. Kidd should not be treated as the sitting member and that Mr. Morris should be treated as the sitting member. I do not care whether you call it a suspension of Mr. Kidd or whether you call it an unseating. The next decision, that neither Mr. Kidd nor Mr. Morris should vote pending the contest, was a deliberate decision of the body of which each claimed to be a member. In the house of representatives Mr. Brohard was rightfully upon the rolls, but the house of representatives decided, in view of the crisis, the exigency that existed in the State of West Virginia, that he should not be treated as the sitting member and should not have the right to vote.

The agreement made between the two political parties cuts no figure. I do not claim it had any force. I do say this, however, that even if the two houses had not acted, and yet Messrs. Kidd and Brohard had refrained from attempting to vote in the joint convention, this would not have invalidated the election. One was a Democrat. The other was a Republican. If one had voted for Mr. McGraw the other would have voted for Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Washington seems to think that he has a right to assume that Mr. Kidd would have voted for Mr. McGraw, but denies that there would be a similar assumption that Mr. Brohard would have voted for Mr. SCOTT. Those 2 votes were not necessary to make a lawful joint assembly. There were 97 members in the joint assembly. There need not have been but 50 in the joint assembly; and then 26 votes for Mr. SCOTT would have elected him; and if 2 men or 10 men or 20 men had sat silent and had not voted—unless there was a knife at their throats, unless there had been bribery or actual violence—this would not have made any difference in the result.

That is the whole of this case. It is whether you will undertake to reopen the decisions of the Senate that have been hitherto made and reject the report of the majority of the committee for the purpose of establishing, contrary to the decision in the Turpie case, a doctrine that there is substantially no limit to the right of the Senate in reversing a decision of a State legislature.

Mr. LINDSAY. I wish to ask the Senator whether either of these members offered to vote or demanded the right to vote?

Mr. MCCOMAS. They did not.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not understand that either of them did. It is absolutely certain that if Mr. Kidd had risen and offered to vote for Mr. McGraw, Mr. Brohard would have risen and offered to vote for Mr. SCOTT. How can Senators pretend that what took place, the amicable and honorable agreement between the leaders on both sides in the West Virginia legislature, into which the best thought in the West Virginia legislature entered, can invalidate what was deliberately done in pursuance of that agreement, to wit, the postponement of the contests in those two cases, and the decision that in the meantime neither of the two men should vote? It was only a week before the election of the Senator was to take place.

Senators know very well that the two contests could not be fairly decided in so short a time. But the houses might have gone on, as in the Turpie case, and have unseated first one member and then another; first a Democrat in the senate and then a Republican in the house. They might have gone on for 10 days doing these things, and then they might have undertaken to cast their ballots for United States Senator. If they had undertaken that kind of a controversy the result would have been two legislatures, no election of United States Senator which we could have recognized, and chaos and perhaps civil war would have come in the State of West Virginia.

Under such circumstances the two political parties came to an agreement, just such an agreement as is made upon this floor every week in a session of Congress. The two houses, acting separately, ratified that agreement. It was an agreement which it was within their power to ratify. The decisions they made were decisions which it was clearly within the power of the legislature of West Virginia to make, and such decisions can not be reversed by this body without reopening the settled law of the Senate and making an assertion that the Federal power as against State rights in reference to State legislatures goes a great deal further than it has ever been contended in this body that it would go, until the junior Senator from Alabama and the senior Senator from Alabama demanded a reversal of the decision of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in this case.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not desire to enter into any discussion of this matter, but as I had a little to say about the subject yesterday I wish to make my position entirely clear.

I think, as a legal proposition, the report of the committee is correct. I think it is the only safe position to be occupied by those who do not desire to see the Senate of the United States enter into the details of the constitution of a State legislature by which a Senator is elected, and for that reason I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

But, Mr. President, I think it due to myself to say that I am unwilling that that vote shall in any manner be construed into an approval of the things which are disclosed here as having occurred in the West Virginia legislature. On the contrary, I wish to assert most emphatically that I as emphatically disapprove of them and think they are not to be justified. I do not think, however, it is a matter that we can go into.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I think this is rather an important question. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some remarks made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] when he submitted this case to the Senate in reply to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], who seemed to somewhat question the report, although he did not call for the yeas and nays, and the report was accepted nem con, I believe, everybody voting for it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator means in the Turpie case.

Mr. TELLER. In the Turpie case. The Senator from Massachusetts, addressing the Senator from New Hampshire, called attention to the position that the Republican party had occupied in the Electoral Commission contest, that we had asserted with great earnestness that the decision of the State authorities as to who was elected was absolutely final, a doctrine that I think everybody is acquiescing in now. After that the Senator from Massachusetts says:

> Now, in the same way we have the right, undoubtedly, being the final judges of the election, qualification, and return of our members here, to see whether the elector in the legislature of the State of Indiana in casting his vote was corrupted, or was under duress, or whether his vote in any way was wrested so that it was not the true and lawful act of that elector; but in determining who has the right to cast the several votes we are bound by the conclusive judgment of the legislative body of the State of Indiana.

He makes there the distinction, and that is what I call the attention of the Senate to, to show that by this doctrine we are contending for we are not preventing ourselves from looking into the honesty or character of an election. That is still left to us. Let me read it again. This is what he says we may do:

To see whether the elector in the legislature of the State of Indiana in casting his vote was corrupted, or was under duress, or whether his vote in any way was wrested so that it was not the true and lawful act of that elector; but in determining who has the right to cast the several votes we are bound by the conclusive judgment of the legislative body of the State of Indiana.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that is a well-stated proposition of law, and one upon which we can stand.

So we had only to inquire in determining whether the votes of these two men, Branahan and McDonald, were to be counted, which changed the result: whether the senate of the State of Indiana had pronounced them to be entitled to seats in that body; and we had no authority given us to say whether they did that against right, or against evidence, or for the purpose of changing the result of the election.

I will not read all the Senator from Massachusetts said, but I will ask leave to put it in my remarks.

A question came up of the lawful organization of that senate whether the lieutenant governor or the person claiming to be president pro tempore of the senate was the lawful and rightful presiding officer. But there was a senate there, a senate of unquestioned authority. The governor of the State was recognizing it as a senate, receiving and approving the laws which it undertook to pass. The other house, the Republican house of the Indiana legislature, was communicating with it as a senate, among other things inviting it to enter into this very joint convention in pursuance of the act of Congress; and it took its constitutional share in legislation and in laws which it passed, so organized and so presided over, by the entire acquiescence of the whole people of the State of Indiana, and is the law of that Commonwealth to-day. And in addition to that, and a still more important recognition than that, every single member, Republican and Democrat alike, of that body in his individual official action recognized it as a lawful senate, acting for all lawful and constitutional purposes.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to have the opinion of the great lawyer who occupies the floor, as to whether the determination of the election and qualification of a member is not one thing, and suspending a member temporarily for a purpose is not another and a different proceeding?

Mr. TELLER. Well, Mr. President, I am not going into any discussion of this question. I rose simply to present what was the declared law of the Turpie case. I am going to quit then. I do not propose to go into any extended discussion of this case. After the Senator from Massachusetts had shown that everybody had recognized the legislature of Indiana as the lawful legislature of that State; that the Republican house had recognized the Democratic senate as the true senate, and that it had agreed to legislation, he concluded as follows:

Therefore, it seems to me, however much I may dislike the result, and however much I may disapprove the action of that body, if it be such as is set forth in this remonstrance, I do not see how, under my oath of office as a Senator, I can help giving effect to the votes of the persons whom that constitutional court—the senate of Indiana—declared, one by one, were entitled to act as electors on that occasion.

Now, Mr. President, there is the whole case in a nut shell. It belongs to the State of West Virginia to determine those questions, and they have determined them; and it seems to me there is nothing for us to do.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TELLER. I want to say that in so declaring we do reserve the right to determine whether the votes that were cast have been corruptly cast or not.

Mr. BACON. I just wanted to remind the Senator from Colorado of the fact that in the Du Pont case the Senate also determined that it was for the legislature of Delaware to determine whether a man who had left the senate and had gone and was then exercising the office of governor should be considered a member of that senate and whether his vote should be counted, and the question whether Mr. Du Pont was elected or not turned on the question whether or not that vote should be counted. If it was not counted, he was elected; if it was counted, it was a tie, and he was not elected. We put the decision squarely upon the ground that the legislature of Delaware should determine that question and that the Senate of the United States would not undertake to go behind that determination.

Mr. TELLER. That is a fact. As I understand, the Senator from New Hampshire called the attention of the Senate to several cases where we had adhered to the doctrine laid down in the Turpie case. I do not understand it was the sole time, by any means, that that declaration had been made by the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I only desire to say that I have never been satisfied with the Turpie case, and I think I expressed my opinion pretty fully on it when the Du Pont case was under consideration. I do not think the Turpie case and this case are by any means similar—certainly not in all points. But this discussion having taken a broad range, I do not wish by my silence to have it considered that I agree to the decision in the Turpie case.

Mr. MCCOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

Mr. MCCOMAS. I will yield to the Senator from Utah, if he desires.

Mr. RAWLINS. I desire to ask the Senator from Maryland, and I am glad he is upon his feet, one question, that we may understand the facts in this case. I will state it as I understand it, and then ask the Senator if I state it correctly. As I understand it, there were 93 members in the joint assembly voting.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Ninety-five.

Mr. RAWLINS. And Mr. SCOTT received 49.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. SCOTT received 48; Mr. McGraw received 46, and Mr. Goff received 1.

Mr. RAWLINS. If the two members who were suspended on the day prior to this convention by the votes of the two houses had been counted, there would have been 97 votes.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Ninety-seven.

Mr. RAWLINS. A majority of that number would have been 49.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Forty-nine.

Mr. RAWLINS. So, if those two had been counted as present, whether voting or not, Mr. SCOTT would have received a majority.

Mr. MCCOMAS. If they had voted.

Mr. RAWLINS. If they had voted. If they had been counted, he would still have had a majority.

Mr. MCCOMAS. He had 48 of the 95 votes cast. There were two other men to make 97 in the apportionment of representation in both houses of the legislature of West Virginia, but the journal of the joint assembly does not disclose anything about the other two men. There were 95 who met in joint assembly.

Mr. RAWLINS. The only point as to which I wanted to ascertain the fact was this——

Mr. MCCOMAS. If Kidd, the Democratic contestant in the senate who had been unseated, had voted with his party, it would have made one more vote for McGraw, but if Morris, the Republican, who had been seated instead of Kidd, had voted, it would have made in the senate one more vote for SCOTT. If Brohard, the sitting member in the house, had voted, it would have made one more vote for SCOTT. It would have increased SCOTT'S majority, but would not have changed the result.

Mr. RAWLINS. I was somewhat confused by the statement of the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] that if there were two members——

Mr. MCCOMAS. The Senator from Washington mistook the facts.

Mr. RAWLINS. Suspended, present in the joint assembly, who did not vote, and who did not, so far as the record shows, ask to vote; but I think we can not say from the record whether they would vote one way or another.

Mr. MCCOMAS. No.

Mr. RAWLINS. The only thing that we would be entitled to do would be to count them as present, and then determine whether Mr. SCOTT had received a majority of those present, whether voting or not, and if they had been counted as present, as I understand the fact to be, Mr. SCOTT would still have received a majority.

Mr. MCCOMAS. That is true.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. I wish to ask a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. MCCOMAS. I yield first to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. STEWART. I have been asking questions for some time, but could not get anybody to answer them. I want to know if all the men voted according to the resolutions of the two houses? Did the two houses determine who should vote, and was anybody there denied the right to vote who under the action of the two houses would have been entitled to vote if his name had been called? I want to determine that question.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I rose to answer that question. What is the inquiry of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. TURNER. The Senator from Utah spoke of the two men who were not permitted to vote as having been suspended. I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland whether they were in fact suspended by any resolution of either of the houses?

Mr. MCCOMAS. They were; and I rose to answer that question.

Mr. TURNER. Was there any suspension other than this agreement?

Mr. MCCOMAS. If the Senator will give me his attention, the fact is stated in the report of the majority. Under the apportionment the senate of West Virginia contained 1 more member and the house 1 more member, making 97 with all seats filled. I have said that there were 95 present in the joint convention. Now, the journal of the joint assembly discloses nothing concerning the 2 who if present and entitled would make the full representation of 97 in the legislature. It does not appear from the journal of either house or from the journal of the joint assembly if they were present or not. It does not show that they were entitled to vote, or that they in any manner claimed a right to vote, or that they waived any right to vote. It is simply silent in respect of two persons who might be one a member of the senate and the other a member of the house.

Of course, prima facie, from the journal of the joint assembly they were not present. It is said in fact that they were in the hall. I do not know. It is certain that if they claimed any representative right, they did not claim it then and there, when it was their duty to claim it. And now, Mr. President——

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCOMAS. I will state why they did not claim it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. McCOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. TURNER. I wish the Senator, before he gets away from this point, to answer my question, whether or not these two members were suspended by either house?

Mr. McCOMAS. Just when the Senator rose I was proceeding to say why and how it was that these two persons did not claim any right, did not make a demand of any right, because they knew their cases had been separately adjudged by the two houses. Here is the first case. The journals of the house and senate explain this matter very fully.

On January 20, 1899, by the senate journal, page 66, it appears a resolution was introduced in the senate declaring that Kidd, the sitting member, was not elected and that Morris was duly elected, directing that Kidd vacate his seat and Morris be sworn in.

Mr. PETTUS. That was not adopted.

Mr. McCOMAS. I am proceeding to say so. That was January 20. In orderly fashion the senate proceeded. On January 23 this resolution was considered by the senate, and a substitute was adopted reciting the contest between Kidd and Morris, the reference to and pendency of the contest before the committee on privileges and elections, and the opinion of that senate that Morris was entitled to the seat pending the contest, wherefore the senate resolved that Kidd was not entitled and that Morris was entitled to his seat in the senate from the Fourth senatorial district pending the contest, and that Morris be sworn in. Morris appeared, took the oath, and was seated.

That is the record of the proceedings of the senate. On January 25 the senate adopted a resolution that the contested-election case of Morris and Kidd be the special order for consideration and determination on its merits on February 7, 1899, with leave to either party to take testimony, "and that pending the determination of such contest neither Morris nor Kidd shall be entitled to vote or sit as a member of this body." The first two resolutions in pursuance of reports from the committee on privileges and elections were passed by a vote of 17 to 8, I think, and the last resolution depriving Morris of his right to vote was passed by a unanimous vote of the senate.

In the house, where Brohard was the sitting Republican member, he had a certificate which the supreme court of West Virginia have, since the legislature sat, declared was a valid certificate, and was entitled to be seated on that certificate. He was seated on that certificate.

On January 12 the house referred to the committee on privileges and elections the question of the right of Brohard, the sitting member, to be sworn in, with instructions to report the person prima facie entitled to be sworn in as a member from Taylor County. On January 16 the house adopted a resolution reported from said committee that, pending the determination of the title to the seat, neither Brohard nor Dent (the contestee) should "be permitted to participate in the proceedings of this house."

On January 24 the majority of that committee reported a resolution in favor of Dent, and the minority reported in favor of Brohard, the sitting member, and no action was taken. But on the 25th the joint assembly met. At that time the senate had regularly suspended the right to vote as to Kidd and Morris and the house had suspended the right of Brohard.

Mr. President, I appear to be much more of a State rights man than the junior Senator or the senior Senator from Alabama, or than the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire. It does seem to me that when each of these houses has passed upon the election, returns, and qualifications of its members, and by orderly procedure has conducted the contest and has unseated a man, and has thereafter said that pending the contest two persons may not vote, neither one nor the other in this house or in that, they have performed their functions, and the Senate has said very broadly in the Turpie case just referred to, and it has said in the Du Pont case, that a legislature has the jurisdiction and the power to do this thing. It was done in these two cases, in these two houses, and is an original exclusive jurisdiction belonging to the senate and the house of the legislature of West Virginia.

I know no other view to take, and I feel bound, and the committee, except the junior Senator from Alabama, felt bound, by the orderly adjudication of the matter which was solely within the jurisdiction of the two houses of the West Virginia legislature. They had these two cases; they passed upon them; but if they had not passed upon them on the day prior to the meeting of the joint assembly, the effect would have been to increase the majority of Mr. SCOTT.

My first proposition is that what they did they had the power to do; that we can not here ratify or repeal it or inquire into it.

My second proposition is that if you did undo what they did by resolution within their power, you would simply increase the majority of SCOTT and not change the result in the legislature. In that assembly in joint convention there sat 49 of one party and 46 of the other, and if you would wipe out this proceeding, which you have no power to do under many Senate rulings which I could cite here to the Senate, you would simply increase the majority of SCOTT and you would not change the result.

Now, Mr. President, one thing more in respect of the procedure of this committee. It is stated, I think adequately, when the committee reported, that the matter was submitted to the committee upon the memorials, the journals of each house, and according to statements of facts and certain oral arguments and admissions of counsel. The oral arguments and admissions of counsel are that this agreement of the 10 members, which appears in the report, should be taken as a part of the case, and that the statement of Mr. Davis, the Democratic leader of the house, as to the object and purpose of this agreement in the case, was a fair statement, authentic, from a man of good authority.

Those are the two oral admissions. The agreed statement of facts simply made certain memoranda not here of consequence a part of the case, and did what was not necessary; it made the journals a part of the case. They were necessarily part of the case. We were bound to take judicial notice of the proceedings in the journals.

The committee determined that the procedure of the two houses settled the question in respect of the two soldier senators, and the committee determined, and by almost a unanimous vote, that the action of the two houses of the assembly settled for this body the situation of the two contested seats, the one of Brohard and Dent in the house, and the other of Kidd and Morris in the senate.

Now, Mr. President, what further was there of the case? There was the whole of it. That settled the result of the election. That settled the election in favor of SCOTT. Senators here have discussed the matter somewhat as if the political majority in the legislature was questioned. That was never questioned before the committee and never questioned in West Virginia. The party vote was, as I said, 49 to 46. It had been 51 to a lesser number at an earlier stage.

Then the remonstrants offered to prove certain declarations of several State officials, members of the general assembly, and of attorneys in arguments before legislative committees.

Now, the committees were of opinion, and this is the matter I ask the attention of Senators to, that there was no proffer of sufficient evidence of either fraud or intimidation affecting the legislature to warrant such investigation by the committee.

The learned and able Senator from Alabama, in his views and in his remarks here, has made much, and earnestly and seriously made much, of those matters. I submit to the Senate they are trivial. When a Republican member of the legislature writes a letter to his wife and somebody finds and reads it, he simply finds that that Republican member was scared, not by the apprehension of a Republican conspiracy, but he writes to his wife and says:

MY DEAREST: I can not tell you when I can get away from here—perhaps not for many days.

Well, that is an excuse of a member of the legislature for not going home.

We are just going into the election——

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. McCOMAS. In a moment.

We are just going into the election of a United States Senator, and no man can tell what a day may bring forth. We are apparently upon the eve of a political revolution. The Democrats in the house seem determined to throw out all the Republican members; and if one more is thrown out, we will secede and form a new house of delegates.

Now, at that time the record shows that Via, a Republican, returned elected, had been unseated and Logan had been seated in his place, and a hysterical attorney, who happened to be attorney-general of the State, in arguing before the committee in a corner of the capitol, had said, "If you do this thing, blood will flow," and they had proceeded to do this thing.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCOMAS. They had turned out Via, the Republican, and they had put in Logan, the Democrat, and the blood did not proceed to flow. Then they proceeded to turn out Brohard, who had 71 majority and whom the supreme court says here should have been seated on a certificate, and he had been seated; and when they were about to turn him out then no blood flowed, and still peace prevailed, and Brohard was deprived of his vote; and this man writes to his family that he could not get home in a day or two because the Democrats had formed a conspiracy to overturn the majority of that legislature.

It did not seem to the committee that that kind of evidence tended to prove a Republican conspiracy, and therefore it was treated very lightly. Then, further, when the attorney-general made a heated expression in his speech before the committee on privileges and elections of the house, that did not seem to be a very material thing; and when somebody said on a corner, "If this thing goes on we will have two legislatures," that did not seem material; and when the chairman of the committee telegraphed the people to get up their contests on one side, as they had upon the other, and the contests had gone on and the Republicans had unseated one, and the Democrats had practically unseated two, it did not seem to the committee that these things were worthy to be investigated, or that they were of sufficient weight or importance, or that, if they tended to prove anything——

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCOMAS. In a moment I will yield to the Senator.

That if they tended to prove anything they were of such little weight and persuasive force that the investigation would be expensive and of no benefit to the Senate; that the record action of the legislature of West Virginia had determined all the material questions, and the committee, except my distinguished and honored friend from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], were unanimously of that opinion.

I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. TURNER. I find that I did not understand the Senator as others around me understood him as to the record from which he read, that the senate had passed a resolution that both Morris and Kidd should be suspended until the termination of the contest. I did not understand the Senator to read any record from the house showing that Dent and Brohard had been suspended.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will read it again.

Mr. TURNER. I am asking for information. I did not understand that the Senator had read any record of that kind.

Mr. McCOMAS. I have read it, and I am sorry the Senator did not hear it. I shall be glad to read it again.

Mr. TURNER. I did not hear the Senator read it; and I wish he would read it again.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will state it very briefly. This election took place on the 25th of January. In the senate on the 20th a resolution was introduced. Does the Senator understand the case in the senate?

Mr. TURNER. I understand the case in the senate.

Mr. McCOMAS. In the house the journal of the house shows that Brohard, when the house assembled, was sworn in as a member upon his certificate. On January 12 the house referred the question of the right of Brohard to a seat to the committee on privileges and elections. On the 16th of January the house adopted a resolution determining that, pending the contest over the seat, neither Brohard nor Dent, the contestee, should be permitted to participate in the proceedings of the house. Then, on January 24, a majority of the committee on privileges and elections reported in favor of Dent, and a minority reported in favor of Brohard, who from the 16th did not participate in the proceedings of the house under that order and resolution of the house itself. The whole proceeding was regular; the result was decisive, and the adjudication was of a matter in which each house had jurisdiction, original and exclusive, and not reviewable here.

Now, if there is nothing else to be said by any Senator, Mr. President, I trust we may have a vote.

Mr. PETTUS. If the Senator will be so entirely courteous as to answer one question, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. McCOMAS. With pleasure.

Mr. PETTUS. Would it not be best to read that entire letter, instead of only a part of it?

Mr. McCOMAS. Which letter?

Mr. PETTUS. The letter from which you read the extract.

Mr. McCOMAS. If I do not weary the Senate, I will state that the letter here is not signed; but on page 50 it appears that this was a letter written by Delegate Oldfield to his wife. I will read the last two sentences of it:

> The Democrats in the house seem determined to throw out all the Republican members; and if one more is thrown out, we will secede and form a new house of delegates.

I had read so far. I now read the rest at the request of my friend from Alabama:

> If everything passes off smoothly and we elect a Senator this week, I will try and be in Washington.

I before omitted to read that.

Mr. STEWART. I believe I now understand the matter, although I could not get a direct answer to the question I put.

Mr. McCOMAS. I shall be glad if the Senator will ask any question he desires.

Mr. STEWART. I believe I understand the fact to be that all of the persons present who had been determined, in the respective houses, to be entitled to vote did vote.

Mr. McCOMAS. Every one of those voted.

Mr. STEWART. And no one was excluded in the joint convention who had the right to vote under the action of the house to which he belonged? If that be the case, I am satisfied with the record.

Mr. McCOMAS. That is the case.

Mr. STEWART. No protest was made?

Mr. McCOMAS. None whatever. No claim of any right was made by anybody. Now I ask for a vote upon the resolution, unless there be further speeches to be made upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] to recommit the resolution to the committee with instructions.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McCOMAS. I hope the Senator will withdraw that request.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not material to me whether the yeas and nays are called on this vote or the other, but I am going to call for the yeas and nays on the final decision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama, to recommit the resolution with instructions.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the passage of the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. ELKINS. It was my intention to have made some remarks on this question before its final determination, but Senators seem to fear that if further speeches are made the matter will go over until to-morrow. I am so anxious that the decision in this case shall be no longer delayed that I will refrain from speaking.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution reported by Mr. McCOMAS from the Committee on Privileges and Elections March 12, 1900, as follows:

> Resolved, That NATHAN B. SCOTT has been duly elected a Senator from the State of West Virginia, for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1899, and that he is entitled to a seat in the Senate as such Senator.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RAWLINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]; but as I understand, if present, he would vote as I vote on this question, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PROCTOR. With the consent of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], so that both the Senator from Alabama and myself can vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PETTUS. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]; but as he was with the majority of the committee in making this report, he would vote with the majority; and so I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON]. I inquire if he has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. BUTLER. If any Senator on the other side of the Chamber can tell me how the Senator from Maryland would vote, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. BACON. Unless some Senator on the other side of the Chamber can state with certainty how the Senator from Rhode Island would vote, I shall be compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. ELKINS. The Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea," if present.

Mr. BACON. If that assurance can be given, I shall allow my vote in the affirmative to remain.

Mr. BATE. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. TURLEY] is not present. If he were here he would vote "yea."

Mr. McCOMAS. I will state that my colleague [Mr. WELLINGTON] would vote "yea" on this question, if present.

Mr. BUTLER. As I have already announced, I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON]; but I am now assured that if he were present he would vote "yea." I therefore feel at liberty to vote; and I vote "yea."

Mr. RAWLINS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], who is absent, which will permit me to vote.

Mr. QUARLES. That transfer of pairs will also enable me to vote; and I vote "yea."

Mr. RAWLINS. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—52.

So the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM MONTANA.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to give notice that on Wednesday next, after the conclusion of the routine morning business, I shall ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution in the Montana Senatorial election case, and I shall request the continuous consideration of the resolution until it is disposed of. If no one shall then desire to speak against the passage of the resolution, I myself shall not say anything in its favor, but rest the case upon the written report of the committee.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, when the evidence in that case will be published.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am able to say—and I am glad the Senator has asked me the question, for I thought some Senator would ask it—that there are 100 copies of the evidence already in the committee room, and a full copy of everything can be furnished to every Senator who desires it.

Mr. ALLEN. I was not aware of that fact. I think we ought to have a longer time to enable us to read that evidence.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say to the Senator that I will furnish any Senator with the three volumes—the whole thing.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall be very glad to get them.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall send a bound copy to the Senator's room this evening.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator will not push the case until we have had an opportunity to read over the evidence and see what it contains, so as to be able to determine the proper course to be pursued.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall call up the case on Wednesday next.

Mr. BACON. As the Senator from New Hampshire is quite familiar with this case, with these volumes of testimony, and the length of time it has taken the committee to receive it, I should like to inquire of him—he also having the familiarity he has with the ordinary duties of a Senator and the extraordinary duties also—how long, in his opinion, it would take a Senator to read over that testimony with the time that he could spare from other matters?

Mr. CHANDLER. These volumes have been in print for some time, and any Senator could have had one of them, as the testimony has been printed from day to day. There are 3,000 pages of testimony. It is summarized in the report, which has been unanimously agreed to by all the members of the committee, and there are also statements in reference to the testimony in the minority report. I hardly think——

Mr. BACON. I should prefer to read the testimony for myself, rather than to take the statement of others.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not finished my sentence. I will send a copy of the testimony to Senators. I hardly think it would be reasonable to ask delay in the consideration of this case until every Senator can read 3,000 pages of testimony. If on next Wednesday any Senator has any request to make in reference to the manner of proceeding with the case, of course the Senate will then consider that request.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator think the Senate would be doing itself justice by pushing this case to a conclusion before a reasonable time has elapsed within which the evidence can be read? I have respect myself for the opinion and the ability of the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and yet I think, after all, I would prefer reading the evidence and examining the questions of law involved for myself before I am required to vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall be glad, in order to shorten the labors of any Senator, to wait upon him myself with the three volumes, and expound particular portions of them to him; and it will be very agreeable to me to do that so far as the Senator from Nebraska is concerned.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from New Hampshire will curb his facetious spirit and withdraw his facetious language——

Mr. CHANDLER. I will take it all back.

Mr. ALLEN. And if he will realize that we are engaged in the transaction of business, and not engaged in sport, he will realize, as everyone should realize, that it is asking a good deal of any man who occupies a seat in this Chamber to take the mere conclusions of a committee without an opportunity to read the evidence upon which those conclusions are based.

Now, as I understand it—I have no interest in this case one way or another any more than any other Senator—the Senator proposes to push the Senate in two or three days into the consideration of this case, which it has taken the committee three months to consider and three months to determine what they ought to do, and that, too, without the slightest opportunity to read a syllable of the evidence submitted before that committee. That would be ridiculous in any court or in any other tribunal.

I should like to see this case taken up at an early day and determined, but I want to see it taken up and determined after Senators have had a reasonable opportunity to read the evidence and digest it for themselves, so as to be able to determine what they ought to do in regard to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I agree to everything the Senator has stated. Senators should have all the opportunity they can reasonably ask for not only to read the report, but to consult the evidence.

The case will be brought up on next Wednesday; and either by arrangement or by vote there can, of course, be such postponement as may be reasonable. Perhaps there will be no difference of opinion as to the time.

Mr. ALLEN. And there may be.

Mr. CHANDLER. And perhaps there may be. If there shall be any, it can be settled by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator if the testimony has been indexed, and if there is an index as to names?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say to the Senator that there is a very carefully prepared and full index, not only an index showing the pages where the testimony of witnesses is to be found, but a subject index. I anticipated the Senator from Nevada. If there is any particular subject connected with the inquiry that he wishes to read about, he will not only find the names of the witnesses and the pages given, but he will find an index of the subject-matter. Everything will be ready, and any Senator can have a copy of the three volumes who wishes for it.

Mr. BATE. I do not understand that the Senator from New Hampshire asks for unanimous consent to take this case up on Wednesday morning and continue it to its conclusion.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, Mr. President; I withdraw my statement that I should ask for a continuous consideration.

Mr. BATE. That is what I desired to know.

Mr. CHANDLER. The subject can then be considered. Whatever may be fair and right in this case can be done, and whatever is important to the sitting Senator from Montana, of course, will be given fair consideration.

I now only give notice that I shall call up the resolution on Wednesday next after the routine morning business. I will furnish a copy of the three volumes to every Senator immediately; and we shall determine on next Wednesday morning what will be fair and reasonable so far as action on the case is concerned.

Mr. BATE. The Senator withdraws his proposition for continuous consideration.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not then ask for continuous consideration.

ELIAS E. BARNES.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (S. 33) for the relief of Elias E. Barnes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Elias E. Barnes $14,548.25, the amount found due him by referees acting under appointment of the then Secretary of the Interior, that amount being the loss and damage sustained by said Barnes by reason of the failure on the part of the United States to keep a contract made and entered into with him by the United States April 21, 1888, for putting in a concrete foundation for the Library building in the city of Washington.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALVADOR COSTA.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 3080) for the relief of Salvador Costa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Salvador Costa be, and is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, and jurisdiction is hereby vested in said court to hear and determine the same; and all the papers, proofs, evidence, and documents pertaining thereto on the files of the Senate shall be transmitted to the said court to be used at the trial of the cause, in conjunction with such other testimony and proof as may be produced at the hearing. And if the court shall find that the said Salvador Costa is justly entitled to recover anything for his said sloop Mary Lawrence or for the use thereof, then it shall render judgment in favor of the claimant for such amount as in the opinion of the court he is fully, fairly, and equitably entitled to, but without interest upon his said claim.

SEC. 2. That no statute of limitation shall apply to the right of recovery by said claimant, and each party shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3419, known as the Alaskan bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be further laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the Alaskan bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to the Senator from Montana that if we take up the Alaska bill the hour is so late that we shall not have a quorum when the time comes to take a vote. We have not been to the Calendar for a long time, and I propose that we now go to the Calendar of unobjected cases.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the fact to be that the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] desires to address the Senate upon the Alaska bill, and he may as well proceed now as in the morning.

Mr. STEWART. By the time he gets through it will be too late for any action in the way of a vote.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Pending that, I ask that the bill (S. 3918) providing for the erection of engine house and the purchase of a chemical engine at Congress Heights, D. C., may be taken up.

Mr. CARTER. I feel constrained to ask the Senator to withhold that request for the time being, in view of the fact that the Senator from Utah is ready to proceed with some remarks on the pending amendment to the Alaskan bill.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Very well.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate more than a few minutes. I simply want to make a statement on the question of what I conceive to be the proper solution of this matter, which has involved considerable discussion.

The Committee on Territories in the Alaskan bill, by sections 72 and 73, have presented two propositions. By section 72 an unrestricted right is given to aliens to acquire, hold, and transfer mining property. By section 73 the validity of any location or the transfer of mining claims heretofore made is not to be open to question on account of the alienage of the locator or the grantor. The first proposition is a material departure from the settled policy of the United States as embodied in its mining law.

The second proposition is an attempt to give a retrospective operation to that policy, and to make valid void mining locations and transfers, and to make void valid mining locations and transfers. To attempt to do this latter is not legislation, in my judgment, but confiscation. Every location of a mining claim in the district of Alaska, whether originally made or by whomsoever made, ought to be determined with reference to the law in force at the time the transaction occurred.

Mr. STEWART. That is right.

Mr. RAWLINS. We ought not by legislation to seek to determine the rights in favor of one person or class of persons as against another person or class of persons. That is not the legitimate province of legislation.

For this reason these two sections, 72 and 73, ought, in my opinion, to be stricken from the bill. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] proposes to accomplish that result—to strike out these two sections—and I am in favor at least of that provision to that extent.

This amendment further provides that "nothing in this act contained shall be construed as changing the existing mining laws of the United States." I see no reason why those laws, which have operated so satisfactorily in all the years that they have been in force in this country in the settlement of these rights upon the public domain, should not be continued in respect to the district of Alaska.

It has been asserted here, I think, under a mistaken view of the law, that Great Britain or the Dominion of Canada and Russia allow aliens, citizens of the United States, an unrestricted right to locate and hold mining property within their respective dominion, and that the United States ought not to be less liberal than those foreign countries. There is no reciprocity of mining right or privilege accorded either by the Czar of Russia or by the Dominion of Canada to citizens of the United States. To show that that is true, I read from the latest report of the Commissioner of the Land Office:

UNITED STATES MINING LAWS AND REGULATIONS THEREUNDER.

Section 13, act of May 14, 1898, according to native-born citizens of Canada "the same mining rights and privileges" accorded to citizens of the United States in British Columbia and the Northwest Territory by the laws of the Dominion of Canada is not now and never has been operative, for the reason that the only mining rights and privileges granted to any person by the laws of the Dominion of Canada are those of leasing mineral lands upon the payment of a stated royalty, and the mining laws of the United States made no provision for such leases.

Mr. President, under the laws of the Dominion of Canada a lease may be obtained for a limited area of mineral land, not to exceed 1,000 feet square, for a period of ten years, upon compliance with certain conditions and the expenditure of certain amounts of money and the payment of a certain annual rental, with the right of renewal of such lease for another ten years upon certain conditions, and a further license, which may be granted to miners upon a certain consideration, to mine upon a similar tract of less than a thousand feet square, to continue only for the period of one year. This is the extent of the mining right or privilege granted under the laws of the Dominion of Canada to persons who are not subjects of Great Britain.

Last year Congress passed this law referred to by the Commissioner of the Land Office giving to native-born citizens of the Dominion of Canada precisely the same right or privilege accorded to citizens of the United States by the laws of the Dominion of Canada. But according to this report that law has been inoperative, not on account of any fault of the United States or of its laws, but because no such privileges are accorded under the laws of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. President, the only other aliens whose rights seem to be in anywise involved in this controversy are subjects of the Czar of Russia. Russia does not permit to American citizens or any alien under any condition any mining right or privilege. Upon the application of certain citizens of my State I had occasion to make an effort in their behalf to procure a privilege to mine in Siberia. It is scarcely necessary to say that I found that such a privilege was not procurable.

These two propositions, as proposed by the committee, if carried into effect would not only be a reversal of the policy settled by our laws in regard to the operation of mines, but let us see what the effect would be. An alien is not authorized under the mining laws to locate a mining claim. A citizen, or one who has declared his intention to become a citizen, is authorized to locate mining ground, and as many claims of the dimensions prescribed in the law as he may be able to locate, complying with the provisions of the law. It is not true that an alien may make a valid location under the law. It is true that an alien may locate a mining claim.

If the alien, before a citizen, or one authorized by the laws of the United States, has located the same ground in compliance with the provisions of and authority conferred by the laws of the Government, has declared his intention to become a citizen, and thus qualified himself to hold, the decisions of the Land Department and the courts go to the extent of holding that that may relate back so as to validate his claim from the beginning, with this qualification: That it can not so relate back so as to cut out or destroy the validity of any intervening adverse right. A, an alien, locates to-day. To-morrow, a citizen, B, locates the same ground. The day after to-morrow the alien declares his intention to become a citizen of the United States. This does not render his original location valid, but the location of B is, under all of the decisions, both of the State and Federal courts, as well as of the Land Office, valid as against the location made by the alien.

This section 73 in that case proposes to make valid the location made by the alien and to make void the valid location made by the citizen.

That is the object sought to be accomplished, as I understand it, by the proposition as made by the committee in this bill, and it is to be the result of the contention of Senators who contend that this amendment offered by the Senator from Montana should not be adopted. That is amendable and subject to the very criticism which the Senator from Wisconsin and other Senators made in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota. We have no right to legislate retrospectively, to make void a valid location or transfer or to make valid a void location.

Mr. President, the proposition as embodied in the proposed amendment of the Senator from Montana, it seems to me, is entirely free from objection down to the point which I have read. It leaves the mining rights in the district of Alaska to be determined precisely as similar rights are disposed of elsewhere in the United States. It proposes expressly to perpetuate the policy adopted in years gone by and which has met with the approval of the Congress and has been adopted in the practice of the miners with the most satisfactory results. But the Senator from Arkansas moves to strike out this part of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana:

> But in any suit, action, or proceeding hereafter commenced involving the validity of an unpatented mining location in Alaska, any party alleging an interest in the subject-matter may put the competency of the locator in issue, and the courts shall determine whether the locator was a citizen or had declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States at the time the location was made.

I have before me a digest of all the decisions of the State and Federal courts and the Land Office upon that subject. I have carefully gone over them. My view of it is that this last provision embodies nothing more than what is now in the law upon this subject. It may be claimed, therefore, that it is unnecessary, and I think that is true; because while a mere intruder or trespasser or person not connecting himself with the United States can not challenge the competency of a man in the peaceable possession of mining property, the decisions without conflict hold that if an alien locates mining ground before he has declared his intention to become a citizen or before he has transferred his possession to one competent to hold, and a citizen of the United States or one having declared his intention to become a citizen has located ground pursuant to the authority of the Congress of the United States, such qualified locator has a right, as representing the United States and the interest which he has thus acquired by the authority of the United States, to put in question the competency of the original locator, to say that he is an alien and under the law had no authority from the United States to make the location. In that way the second party, as to the ground located by the alien, stands in the shoes of the United States. That is what Lindley on Mines and other writers mean when they say that only the United States or a person connected with the United States in interest can raise the question as to the competency of the party who made the location of the mining ground.

Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] invited my attention to a recent decision rendered in my State on that subject. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] invited my attention to a recent decision of the circuit court of appeals for the Eighth circuit. If the Senator will examine those cases, he will find that what I contend for is precisely what was held in those cases. I read from the opinion of the Supreme Court cited by the Senator from Nevada. I read from page 302, 56 Pacific Reporter:

> From a review of all of them—

That is, of the authorities—

> upon this question, we conclude that if Kappes, although not a citizen—

At the time he made the location of the claim—

> From a review of all of them upon this question we conclude that if Kappes, although not a citizen, performed all the acts necessary to a valid location of the claims and claimed to be the owner thereof, as the proof tends to show, and if he or his administrator performed the work necessary to keep his claims good, had he been a citizen, until the administrator, by order of the court and by consent of the heirs, conveyed the claims to the defendant or its grantors, and if the defendant was a citizen of the United States when it received the conveyance, and after the conveyance to it took possession and control of the claims and kept up the monuments and performed the necessary conditions to keep the claims good, its grantor, being a citizen, carried a good and valid right to the claims as against the plaintiffs from the date of the conveyance to it and its grantors, provided no other right attached in plaintiff's favor prior to such conveyance and the subsequent performance of the required conditions by it and its grantors.

In other words, if no intervening right accrued by the location of the claim prior to the transfer of the possession to a citizen or one qualified to hold, such transferee would be entitled to hold. If there had been an intervening location accruing, then such declaration of the original locator to become a citizen of the United States would not relate back so as to cut out the intervening claimant.

The same principle is affirmed by the decision in the circuit court of appeals in the Eighth circuit. It draws precisely the same distinction; and I call attention to the same principle, as embodied in the decision of the Land Department, which is as follows:

> A claim to public land illegally initiated by an alien may not be validated by a subsequent declaration of intention to become a citizen in the face of an intervening adverse right.

Now, the Wulf case, reported in 152 United States, in no manner conflicts with this doctrine. There the location was by a citizen of the United States, and of course valid. Subsequently it was transferred to an alien, and the court simply held that that did not operate as a forfeiture of the right which had been acquired by the citizen in the original location.

Mr. President, without referring to the numerous decisions upon this subject, I simply content myself by saying that I do not think there is any case where the question has been precisely raised in which it has been held that a party connecting himself with the United States by complying with the mining laws of the United States in the making of a mining location can not raise the question as to the competency of an adverse party, whether claiming by original location or otherwise. Such person indirectly represents the United States in raising the question.

It is true that the decisions go to this extent: That if an alien is in the possession of property, another alien can not raise the question as to his competency to retain possession of it. If an alien is in peaceable possession of property, his right to possession can not be questioned by a mere naked trespasser—a man who does not proceed under and by virtue of the authority conferred by Congress to take possession of and appropriate a part of the public domain for mining purposes.

But in every case in all the courts in California, Nevada, Montana, Utah, and Colorado the question has been permitted to be raised in every instance; and so it has been held in the Land Department where two parties were claiming the same ground, each claiming to have complied with the conditions of the mining laws to give him the right to it, where one of the questions involved was the competency of one or the other of the persons to make the location, it being contended that he was not a citizen or had not declared his intention to become a citizen. So if this be true, the latter part of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana does not in any wise change the existing law. It is a reaffirmation of that which is found in every decision bearing upon this question.

To further illustrate this idea, in 83 California, the supreme court of California decided that where an alien located mining ground one day and it was relocated the next day by a citizen the citizen took as against the alien. It was held that he could raise the question, as he did raise it in the pleadings, and the decision was in his favor.

In a case, I think in 62 California, where precisely the same question was involved which was presented in the Wulf case in 152 United States, where a citizen located a mining claim and subsequently transferred or sold to an alien, it was held by the supreme court of California that in that case the sale to an alien did not operate to defeat the title so as to permit the relocation of the ground. It did not operate as a forfeiture. So a later decision made by the supreme court of California was regarded by that court as in strict harmony with its earlier decisions and in strict harmony with the decision rendered by the United States Supreme Court, and reported in 152 United States.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question.

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Have the courts decided that where a citizen purchased a location made by an alien after the ground had been relocated by a citizen, the citizen purchasing from the alien can hold the claim?

Mr. RAWLINS. The courts, without exception, have held to the contrary.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I had been informed that they have so held.

Mr. RAWLINS. They have never so held. I am satisfied that no case can be found to that effect. I have requested the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Nevada, both of whom have had great experience upon this question, to furnish me a case holding any such doctrine; and I have been cited by the Senator from Colorado to the Utah case, from which I have just read and in which the court distinctly held that the ground located by an alien was subject to relocation by a citizen, and if so located before the alien declared his intention to become a citizen and thus qualified himself or transferred his possession to a citizen who was entitled to hold, the intervening locator's right would prevail.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is the point.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RAWLINS. I will.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say to the Senator that I do not accept that as a correct statement of the law. I shall take occasion to say that he is not correct in that particular. I wish to call his attention, so that he may now make his reply, if he chooses, to this point:

If it is true that the courts have laid down the rule for more than two hundred and fifty years that nobody can take advantage of the alien ownership and holding except the sovereignty itself, which they have held very decidedly—that it is a question for the Government and the Government alone—is it not true that that rule is changed if he is correct when he says that the qualified locator of a claim has so connected himself with the Government that he stands in the place of the Government? If he makes that assertion, he must support it by some decisions, which I challenge him to do.

I can call attention to the case of Fairfax, lessee, vs. Hunter, which was settled in 1818, as I recollect, in which the question arose in this way: A grant had been made to Lord Fairfax while we were citizens or subjects of Great Britain. Fairfax adhered to the Crown. The colony of Virginia granted the same land to the Hunter heirs, and the controversy there was between them. That brings up squarely the case which the Senator cited.

Mr. RAWLINS. I understand——

Mr. TELLER. Wait a moment. The court there held that the State of Virginia could not in that method raise the question; that it must be by direct office-found. I shall present that case and have it considered, I hope, by the Senate, because it goes into the question very carefully and shows the reason why nobody but the sovereignty should be allowed to raise the question. I want to say to the Senator that he can not find a case where the courts have adjudicated property against an alien because he was an alien, where the Government itself was not concerned.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I prefer to go on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah declines to yield.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that I have not been able to find any case which would cover the Senator's declaration in reply to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. RAWLINS. I do not intend to detain the Senate by referring to the numerous cases, a digest of which I have before me, that held precisely what I understood the Senator to dispute. For instance, the case in my own State——

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I do not mean to say that the States have not so held. It was so held in Nevada, so held in Colorado, so held in Utah, so held in Montana, but the Supreme Court, the court of final resort, has in every case set them aside every time they went up.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have here before me the case which the Senator cited, the very latest case, a rehearing of the case of Billings et al. vs. The Aspen Mining and Smelting Company. Their attention was called to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and they quote from it.

Mr. TELLER. I have that case here.

Mr. RAWLINS. They say:

> It is true that the mineral lands of the United States are open to exploration and purchase only by citizens of the United States, or by those who have declared their intention to become such; and, had the objection been taken in the court below that such citizenship of the plaintiffs had not been shown, it might, if not obviated, have been fatal. There is, however, nothing in the record to show that it was raised below.

The court further proceeds to say:

> There can be no question, under the provisions of section 2319 of the Revised Statutes, that when application is made for the issuance of evidence of title to mining property it is necessary to show that the applicant is a citizen of the United States, or has declared his intention to become such, before a conveyance of title can be properly issued; and therefore, as was held by the Supreme Court in the case just cited, if a party is seeking to procure the title to mining property from the United States, if taken at the proper time, the objection of alienage would prevent the acquirement of title, and such objection may be made by any one adversely interested.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me in that connection?

Mr. RAWLINS. In one moment. Let me complete reading this opinion.

Mr. STEWART. It applies to the applicant for a patent, not to a locator.

Mr. RAWLINS. No; it declares distinctly in this case—> and such objection may be made by anyone adversely interested. In such cases the sovereign is a party in fact to the proceeding, which is a direct one, for the procurement of title, and the objection of alienage, no matter by whom suggested, is based solely upon the right of the Government to interpose the fact of alienage as a bar to procuring or holding an interest in realty. If, however, the grant of title, or the equivalent, is made to an alien, it can not be attacked by any third party.

Mr. STEWART. What case is the Senator reading from?

Mr. RAWLINS. I am reading from the decision of the circuit court of appeals, reported in 52 Federal Reporter.

Mr. TELLER. What is the case?

Mr. RAWLINS. It is the case of Billings et al. vs. The Aspen Mining and Smelting Company.

Mr. STEWART. The statute expressly requires the applicant for a patent to make that showing. In many cases that have come under my observation where an alien had made a location he would, before he made an application for a patent, declare his intention and relocate it. He must be a citizen or a person who has declared his intention in order to get title from the Government. That is another question. You will find in a subsequent section that that is required.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I have invited the attention of both the learned Senators to this matter and invited them to produce authorities. They have produced the Wheaton case and the Wulf case.

Now, Mr. President, that involves the right of an alien to hold by purchase against a stranger to the Government, or the sovereignty. That was the Wulf case, in 152 United States. Those cases are cited in this case to which I have just called attention by the circuit court of appeals. Those cases are cited in the case from my own State. They are referred to in the decisions of the different States, in California, including all the mining States, and in each of those cases this distinction is drawn.

The mining laws of the United States are tendered to citizens or those who have declared their intention to become citizens upon certain conditions. The question of citizenship is one of the conditions upon which it grants this bounty. When the location has been made by a citizen and the other conditions have been complied with, there is a qualified right of property in the mining claim. An alien may come in and purchase that for a valuable consideration of the person who has made the location of it, being a citizen or one who has declared his intention to become a citizen.

In that case every requirement of the mining law has been complied with. The land is no longer open to location, because it has already been validly located. No citizen or alien can then come in and plant himself upon that ground with the license or authority of the laws of the United States. In every such case any trespasser is a mere wrongdoer, and he does not connect himself with the United States or with any authority conferred by the United States; therefore he can not raise the question as to the right of possession under those circumstances. In that case the Government alone can enforce the forfeiture by office found.

But take the case where an alien, when not having declared his intention to become a citizen, has located the mining ground, he does it in violation of the express provision of the act of Congress. The citizen of the United States has the right to go upon that and treat it as a void location and conform to the laws of the United States. When he goes there he goes by the authority or by the direction of the United States, the sovereignty, and in so far as he pursues that authority thus regularly conferred upon him he stands in the shoes of the United States, and for the purpose of effectuating the purposes of the United States and its policy he has a right, when the first locator, being incompetent, challenges his right, under the authority of the United States to say, "Here, you have no right from the Government, and I am in the shoes of the Government to show that you are not a citizen and have not declared your intention to become such, and therefore you are not entitled to locate this ground."

But, on the other hand, if an alien locates and after his location declares his intention to become a citizen, he has thus united his competency with the other conditions prescribed by the law and complied with them, and he is there then by authority of law in possession, and his mining claim is not then subject to relocation. A citizen goes in then as an intruder and does not connect himself with the United States. This has been liberally construed by the courts to the extent of giving a retroactive effect to a declaration of an intention to become a citizen, provided only that it does not interfere with any intervening adverse right; but if so, it can not act retrospectively so as to make valid a void location originally made as against an intervening right acquired by the location of a citizen.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask a question of the Senator. I understand him now to say that the location made by an alien is a void location. Does he understand that it is treated that way in the Departments?

Mr. RAWLINS. I do. I have here numerous decisions by the Land Office which hold precisely this proposition which I make. I have just read one, a decision rendered in 11 Land Decisions, 354, Central Pacific Railroad Company vs. Taylor:

A claim to public land illegally initiated by an alien may not be validated by subsequent declaration of intention to become a citizen in the face of intervening adverse rights.

Mr. TELLER. Is that a mining claim or is that under preemption and homestead?

Mr. RAWLINS. Well, the same principle is applied both to homesteads and preemption and to mining law.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator cite a mining case?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes.

An alien may neither locate nor hold a mining claim.

That is supported by numerous decisions. I will call attention to one:

No act by an alien who has not declared his intention to become a citizen can confer upon him any right to public land.

That is in 14 Land Decisions.

Mr. TELLER. Referring to homestead or preemption entry?

Mr. STEWART. Do I understand the Senator to contend that when an alien has located a mining claim and is in possession working it, a citizen can go upon his place while he is in possession and make a valid location, and thus exercise the sovereign right himself and decide that the possessor is an alien and that the citizen has a right to take it?

Mr. RAWLINS. If he complies with the conditions of the mining law by staking the claim and posting his notice accordingly, and by preliminary work which he has performed upon land on which no one except an alien has begun to make a mining location, the location is valid and he stands in the shoes of the Government.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose he does the work and the other has not had an opportunity to do any work on it?

Mr. RAWLINS. I state the legal principle.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose also that he discovered it and was working it and a man comes along and says, "I am going to take your claim because you are an alien, and I confiscate your property."

Mr. RAWLINS. The laws and policy of the United States do not extend this bounty of free mining to any but citizens and those who have declared their intention to become citizens. Therefore, no alien can, with any kind of good faith, make any mining locations upon lands belonging to the United States. No person can buy of an alien in good faith, knowing him to be an alien, because he knows that it is an evasion or a violation of the settled policy of the United States as declared by the law.

Why, think of it in respect to Alaska. No country on earth gives aliens the right to mine. Very few countries permit them to mine on any conditions; the mines are operated on government account. In Canada they have only a limited right for a year, or a lease founded upon a consideration; in Russia not at all. Yet this proposition which has been contended here by some Senators is that during the Arctic night a few Laplanders in sufficient number from Russia can steal down into the district of Alaska and locate every foot of mineral lands within that immense territory and thereby shut out and exclude for all time the citizens of the United States. I say it is a monstrous proposition. I do not know any personalities in this matter or any cases. I am not here advocating any cases.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator wants to be accurate. Now, there never was any distinction made between an alien and a citizen in all Canada and British Columbia until 1899, and that they are going to repeal. They have practically repealed it by the council already. The same terms were applied in Australia. Thousands of our people went to Australia, and the same rules applied to them.

Mr. RAWLINS. I object——

Mr. STEWART. I am stating a fact. You said it never was done. I say it has been done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah declines to yield.

Mr. STEWART. Our people have had more benefit from it than anybody else.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have already called attention to the fact that this Government has acted as generously to the people of Canada as they can by any possibility demand. Last year we enacted the provision that native-born citizens of Canada could have the same mining rights that are accorded to citizens of the United States in British Columbia and the Northwest Territory by the laws of the Dominion of Canada. That law is still in force. If you strike out these provisions, it will still remain in force.

Now, what does the Commissioner of the Land Office say? He says that that has not been operative, not on account of any fault of the United States, but because in Canada the Dominion of Canada does not permit rights at all only by a lease or license. A man may go into Canada and he is restricted, in the first place, to less than a thousand feet square. If he succeeds in obtaining a lease he can only hold it for ten years on the payment of an annual rental and royalty, as stated here, and upon the expenditure of money afterwards for its development. I have examined the law.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. RAWLINS. For a question.

Mr. TELLER. I will call the attention of the Senator, if he does not know the fact, to the fact that a citizen of the United States, by taking out a license on the payment of $5 a year and paying $500, can get a fee-simple title to a claim in Canada.

Mr. RAWLINS. I know he can not.

Mr. TELLER. I know he can.

Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator will examine the mining laws, the laws of mines in Canada, published last year, and which are in the library——

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say to the Senator that I speak from knowledge, because I have been up there in the mining country, and I know.

Mr. RAWLINS. When?

Mr. TELLER. I have examined the law, and I know that is the law. There can be no mistake about it.

Mr. RAWLINS. Yesterday I invited the attention of the Senator to a volume published last year containing the laws of mines of the Dominion of Canada now in force, and he will find that the statement made by the Commissioner of the Land Office is strictly accurate. What does the Commissioner say in his latest report? It is an official document. The Commissioner says:

Section 13—

Of our law, which I have quoted—

is not now and never has been operative, for the reason that the only mining rights and privileges granted to any person by the laws of the Dominion of Canada are those of leasing mineral lands upon the payment of a stated royalty, and the mining laws of the United States make no provision for such leases.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator is entirely mistaken. I examined the law last week, and I have had it here on my table.

Mr. RAWLINS. I want Senators, if they think I am mistaken, to bring in the law.

Mr. STEWART. I did have it here, and I read it. I had it here.

Mr. RAWLINS. I know the Senator read from a letter.

Mr. STEWART. I had a letter here on my table, and I read extracts from it. There never was any distinction between citizens and aliens in Canada, or any part of the country, until 1899, and then——

Mr. RAWLINS. Now, I will make this proposition to Senators. Of course they are experienced, and I dislike to put myself in opposition to them, and I only do it because I am prepared to verify the correctness of my statement. I ask those Senators to examine the Law of Mines of Canada of 1898, page 286, which they can obtain in the library, and they will find that there are only two classes of mining rights which can be procured. One is the lease of less than a thousand feet square, to continue not to exceed ten years, upon compliance with certain conditions and the payment of certain annual rentals, with the right of renewal upon certain conditions; and the other is the license to continue for but a year upon certain considerations for gold mining.

All the rights that our miners have in the Klondike are obtained by virtue of those licenses. They go there, and however much money they may expend, of however immense value the land they may develop by their labor and expenditure, the Dominion of Canada holds the right at the expiration of the year to take and appropriate that to itself. So in regard to the lease; no matter how much money is expended upon the lease for the term of ten years, at the end of ten years it goes to the Dominion of Canada. In the meantime the rents and royalties go to the Dominion of Canada. There is a right of renewal upon certain conditions for ten years, but when that expires the land belongs to the Dominion of Canada. I defy Senators, under the law now in force in the Dominion of Canada, to find where any permanent fee-simple title to mining property can upon any condition or any circumstances be acquired under their laws.

Mr. PETTIGREW. By an alien?

Mr. RAWLINS. Or by a citizen. Of course in the past they have allowed those rights which have been transferred. I am not disputing but that the Senator from Colorado at the time he speaks of may be entirely correct; but I invite attention to the latest policy as enacted into law in the Dominion of Canada, and after the Senator has examined this page to which I refer, if he can find anything in those laws bearing out the contention he makes, of course I shall be glad to withdraw my statement of the fact.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I understand there was some recent legislation about the Klondike country which, as has been stated, has not been put in force, and which, we are assured, is to be withdrawn. Now, I speak of what I know, having gone both in 1893 and in 1898 into the British Columbia region.

Mr. RAWLINS. I will not dispute, because——

Mr. TELLER. I say there can be a fee-simple title obtained to mining land.

Mr. RAWLINS. Under the revised statutes of Manitoba there was a right to obtain title. I had occasion to examine it.

Mr. TELLER. And you can get title in the Territory of Victoria, too.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator is right. At that time under their laws mining rights might be acquired. But that policy has been reversed. There are certain citizens of the United States now owning rights under those older laws; but that policy has been reversed. They have refused our tender of reciprocity in regard to mining privileges.

Mr. President, under these circumstances I say it would be the grossest injustice to citizens of the United States, thousands of them who have taken their fortunes and their lives in their hands and gone to Alaska, to be shut out, excluded absolutely, by the subjects or citizens of Russia, or Great Britain, or any other country, when under our laws, so liberal, made so purposely, because limited to our own citizens or those who intended to become such, one individual may locate any number of claims upon complying with the conditions of those laws.

Now, in Alaska where gold was discovered a single man making the discovery can open and develop and disclose an immense wealth covering, it is estimated, millions of acres, perhaps, of mining lands. An alien, more advantageously situated, a little better adapted, having been supplied by our Government with the means of access so as to reach it at least a little sooner than citizens of the United States, could take the short cut, and that, too, in violation of the express provisions of our law. They do not take time to go to a competent court to declare their intention, but go before some incompetent tribunal to declare it, and by reason of taking the short and illegal cut they could cut out the American citizens, who are taking the lawful and right road pointed out to them by the laws of the United States. You are proposing by legislation to validate and confirm void locations, made under those circumstances, in favor of subjects of Russia, and give to that autocrat these immense treasures which we bought of them by the payment of money, and shut out our own people.

Now, I am not in favor of that. What we ought to do is to let each transaction, each location and its validity, depend upon the circumstances and facts surrounding it by the law in force at the time it was made, giving the rewards to those who have followed the law and conformed to it and not to those who have attempted to violate it by a short road and thus gain a monopoly and exclude those who are at least as meritorious in their efforts to secure this prize as they.

Now, Mr. President, this is about all I care to say on the subject. It is a plain proposition.

Mr. STEWART. Before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to inquire if he is willing that every provision in the bill in regard to mines shall be left out and leave in nothing but a civil code. That, I think, is what we ought to do.

Mr. RAWLINS. I am not prepared to pass upon the entire code.

Mr. STEWART. No; but——

Mr. RAWLINS. I am prepared to say this, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, in my opinion, leaves the mining laws and policies of the United States precisely as they always have been. That amendment does not undertake to dispose of any right if an alien have a right. It does not propose to validate any right or give anything to him if he does not have the right by virtue of the law in force at the time of the transaction.

Mr. STEWART. But the Senator is not willing to leave the laws as they are, but contends that this amendment is harmless.

Mr. RAWLINS. I think that is just what the amendment does, to that extent.

Mr. STEWART. If the amendment leaves it where it is, why not leave out the amendment? What is the object of this legislation to give one man another man's property? If there is no need of legislation on the subject, why change it?

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 28, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 27, 1900.

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Henry B. F. Macfarland, of the District of Columbia, to be a Commissioner of the District of Columbia, vice John B. Wight, whose term of office will expire May 5, 1900.

John W. Ross, of the District of Columbia, to be a Commissioner of the District of Columbia—a reappointment—whose term of office will expire May 5, 1900.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION.

Sidney B. Everett, of Massachusetts, now consul at Batavia, to be secretary of the legation of the United States at Guatemala City, Guatemala, to fill an original vacancy.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

John W. Rice, to be postmaster at Weatherford, in the county of Custer and Territory of Oklahoma.

William E. Homme, to be postmaster at Wittenberg, in the county of Shawano and State of Wisconsin.

Hulda J. Fessenden, to be postmaster at Saylesville, in the county of Providence and State of Rhode Island.

Samuel A. Smith, to be postmaster at Indiana, in the county of Indiana and State of Pennsylvania.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 27, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LOUD. This is a matter, Mr. Speaker, which involves the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD], and I do not know whether he is in his seat or not. If he is not, I will wait a reasonable length of time——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suggest to the gentleman from California that the gentleman from Massachusetts is not in his seat.

Mr. LOUD. Then I will let this matter go until we have concluded the consideration of the bill before the House last evening on which the yeas and nays were ordered, but no longer. The gentleman has maligned me——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I know nothing whatever, of course, of the question at issue.

Mr. LOUD. I will wait until after the vote is taken on the pending bill.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR HAWAII.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is on the adoption of the conference report on the Hawaiian bill, and on that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 54, answered "present" 21, not voting 138; as follows:

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that I am paired on all political questions with Mr. CROMER, of Indiana, and there appearing to be a division in the House on political lines, I withdraw my vote in the negative, and desire to be marked as "present."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with my colleague, Mr. COOPER of Texas. I voted "aye" on this proposition, but desire to withdraw my vote and be marked as "present."

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague, Mr. METCALF, and desire to withdraw my vote and be marked as "present."

Mr. HULL. I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. HAY; and as I voted and he has not, I desire to withdraw my vote and be marked as "present."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I voted in the negative. I find that I am paired, and in order to observe that pair, I will ask to withdraw my vote and be marked as "present."

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear my name called. I was in the Hall, but did not hear my name.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. I was listening when the roll was called. My attention might have been called away at the moment my name was called. I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's name can not be called upon that statement.

Mr. THAYER. I will ask if the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GILLETT, has voted?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. THAYER. I am paired, and wish to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

Mr. ZENOR. I have a general pair with my colleague, Mr. BRICK. I voted on the roll call, and am inclined to think my colleague would vote just as I did, but not being advised on that point, I desire to withdraw my vote and be marked as "present."

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I desire to say that I am paired generally with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BOREING. If he were here, I do not know how he would vote. I was present, but refused to vote, but if he were here, I should have voted "aye."

The SPEAKER. This statement is entirely out of order.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HEMENWAY. I voted "no" and desire to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Speaker, having voted in the affirmative, I wish to withdraw my vote and to answer "present," as I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MCCALL.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For the session:

Mr. HULL with Mr. HAY.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. WILSON of South Carolina.

Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. HALL.

Mr. METCALF with Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania with Mr. POLK.

Until further notice:

Mr. ADAMS with Mr. BERRY.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts with Mr. THAYER.

Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. NORTON of Ohio.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. BURKE of Texas.

Mr. WEYMOUTH with Mr. BROUSSARD.

Mr. PRINCE with Mr. GRIFFITH.

Mr. MINOR with Mr. RIXEY.

Mr. COCHRANE of New York with Mr. CROWLEY.

Mr. MERCER with Mr. CLAYTON of Alabama.

Mr. OTJEN with Mr. BRENNER.

Mr. LANDIS with Mr. LAMB.

Mr. PUGH with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

Mr. HAWLEY with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. McCALL with Mr. GAINES.
Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine with Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri.
Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts with Mr. WILSON of Idaho.
Mr. WEEKS with Mr. SMALL.
Mr. ZENOR with Mr. BRICK.
Mr. LORIMER with Mr. CUSACK.
Mr. STEWART of Wisconsin with Mr. NORTON of South Carolina.
Mr. EMERSON with Mr. RUPPERT.
Mr. DRISCOLL with RIORDAN.
Mr. STEWART of New York with Mr. MAY.
Mr. MIERS of Indiana with Mr. HEMENWAY.
Mr. RANSDELL with Mr. SIMS.
Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. NAPHEN.
Mr. GILL with Mr. LEWIS.
Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. ATWATER.
Mr. HENRY of Connecticut with Mr. GORDON.
Mr. POWERS with Mr. BANKHEAD.
Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. STALLINGS.
Mr. GAMBLE with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.
Mr. WATSON with Mr. ELLIOTT.
Mr. DOLLIVER with Mr. ROBB.
Mr. DAYTON with Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.
Mr. McCLEARY with Mr. SPIGHT.
Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. DRIGGS.
Mr. CONNELL with Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT.
Mr. BARNEY with Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi.
Mr. REEVES with Mr. SPARKMAN.
Mr. CROMER with Mr. GRIGGS.
Mr. BOREING with Mr. FITZPATRICK.
Mr. BISHOP with Mr. CAMPBELL.
Mr. DOVENER with Mr. CATCHINGS.
This day:
Mr. BULL with Mr. BREWER.
Mr. LITTAUER with Mr. LLOYD.
Mr. PEARRE with Mr. QUARLES.
Mr. KERR with Mr. LENTZ.
Mr. DAHLE of Wisconsin with Mr. GAYLE.
Mr. BUTLER with Mr. SUTHERLAND.
Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. SLAYDEN.
Mr. EDDY with Mr. FITZGERALD of New York.
Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. MULLER.
Mr. YOUNG with Mr. BENTON.
Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. HENRY of Texas.
Mr. COUSINS with Mr. BREAZEALE.
Mr. DICK with Mr. CHANLER.
This vote:
Mr. WACHTER with Mr. RICHARDSON.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD with Mr. BAILEY of Texas.
Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts with Mr. DE VRIES.
Mr. FARIS with Mr. DINSMORE.
Mr. CRUMPACKER with Mr. FOX.
Mr. CONNELL with Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT until Tuesday next.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I find that I am paired. I did not know it at the time I voted. I ask leave to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. KNOX, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CORRECTION OF A REPORT.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to make a correction in the RECORD. By mistake, Report No. 1158, on the Minnesota National Park, was filed as coming from the Public Lands Committee, when it should have been filed as coming from the Committee on Indian Affairs. I ask leave to withdraw the report, and will file it as from the Indian Affairs Committee.

The SPEAKER. This is not a correction of the RECORD. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to withdraw the report named for the purpose of making a correction therein. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BENJAMIN D. GREENE AND OTHERS.

Mr. LOUD rose and was recognized.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California consents to allow me to present a privileged report. In view of the importance of the subject involved, I ask unanimous consent that the report and papers accompanying it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SULZER. What is the report?

Mr. RAY of New York. It relates to the Gaynor matter.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first read the report to the House, so that they may understand what is before them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Benjamin D. Greene, John F. Gaynor, Edward H. Gaynor, and W. T. Gaynor were duly indicted by the grand jury of the United States for the southern district of Georgia, upon presentment to United States District Judge Emory Speer, at Savannah, Ga., for defrauding the Government of the United States of more than $2,000,000 in connection with Capt. Oberlin M. Carter; and

Whereas the said parties were arrested in the city of New York upon the requisition issued out of the district court of the southern district of Georgia, and upon the hearing before United States Commissioner Shields were ordered to be delivered to the custody of the proper officials to be surrendered to the officers of said district court for the southern district of Georgia; and

Whereas Judge Addison Brown, of the United States district court of New York, upon an appeal from said order of Commissioner Shields, overruled said order for the removal of said parties to Savannah, Ga., and ordered their discharge; and

Whereas the Attorney-General of the United States is reported in the public press to have stated that the decision of Judge Brown was "unwarranted by the law and the facts:" Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives what further steps, if any, have been taken to cause Benjamin D. Greene, John T. Gaynor, Edward H. Gaynor, and W. T. Gaynor to be remanded to the jurisdiction of the district court of the southern district of Georgia for trial.

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the resolution H. Res. 234, a copy of which is annexed, report the same back with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

In view of the information given in the letters and papers, copies of which are annexed, the adoption of such resolution is unnecessary.

The Senate act on the subject has passed that body, and is now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary of the House. A hearing thereon is to be had Friday, May 4.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some definite statement from the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary whether he intends to report that bill to the House or not.

The SPEAKER. Of course the House understands that debate is not in order on this motion, and anything that takes place will be by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAY of New York. My request was, Mr. Speaker, that this report and accompanying papers might be printed in the RECORD. That would give any information to the gentleman that he needs. There are two letters there from the Attorney-General giving full information about this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to have the report just read and the accompanying papers printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I object to it until we can see what it is.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The question was taken; and the report was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. EDDY, indefinitely, on account of sickness.
To Mr. SPIGHT, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 10097. An act to authorize the Atlantic and Gulf Short Line Railroad Company to build, construct, and maintain railway bridges across the Ocmulgee and Oconee rivers within the boundary lines of Irwin, Wilcox, Telfair, and Montgomery counties, in the State of Georgia;

H. R. 8962. An act to authorize the New Orleans and Northwestern Railway Company, its successors and assigns, to build and maintain a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, in the State of Louisiana;

H. R. 8585. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent forest fires on the public domain," approved February 24, 1897;

H. R. 2331. An act granting an increase of pension to Festus Dickinson; and

H. J. Res. 168. Joint resolution for change in location of aids to navigation on Simmons Reef and Lansing Shoal, in Lake Michigan.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LOUD. Under ordinary circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I would not detain this House on a question of personal privilege. I would not on one betrayal, at least, Mr. Speaker; but when it comes to two or three I think it my duty, especially where a gentleman has inserted a charge in the RECORD that the Reporter's notes do not contain. I refer to page 5097 of the daily RECORD, and will quote Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. This was on yesterday:

The question of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that the gentleman from California, chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post-Roads, made an agreement here yesterday in the presence of the House which he has violated. In the discussion yesterday regarding the amendment introduced by him and passed by the House repealing the eight-hour law, he said he would offer no objection to the committee going back to that paragraph.

The amendment was passed under a misapprehension, owing to the statement made by the gentleman from California that it was acceptable to the letter carriers. This was not a true statement of the facts, as I afterwards found out, and in order that the House may preserve its rights in the matter I asked the gentleman from California to return to this paragraph. This he agreed to do; but he has since violated that agreement. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the House should take some notice of this action, and at any rate allow the members to consider this amendment anew.

Now, probably if that charge had been made upon the floor, I should not have risen to a question of personal privilege, but I hold up to the attention of the House what has been injected into the RECORD by the gentleman from Massachusetts. He has entirely erased every word that the Reporter's notes credited him with saying, and has made up and written in what he thought last evening, probably in the seclusion of his home, the people of his State thought he should have said.

Now, let us go over this whole transaction; and while, Mr. Speaker, so far as this House is concerned, I am perfectly willing to leave my reputation and my statements to this House as between the gentleman from Massachusetts and myself, I believe the House does not think I would violate an agreement that was made; but, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who made this charge is a member of the House of Representatives of the United States of America. Some people think that such a person is a great man. Some people, Mr. Speaker, may take this gentleman seriously, while, of course, I do not; and if it were not to go beyond this House, why, I would pay no more attention to it than a fly lighting upon my nose; and statements that the gentleman has made before, let me say, Mr. Speaker, I have not resented.

The gentleman has performed on my back, like a monkey performs on the back of an organ grinder, for years, and I have not resented it. It has amused him, and helped him, possibly, in his district to secure votes; and I was perfectly willing, Mr. Speaker, to have the gentleman perform once or perhaps twice. But you know that on a summer day when a fly lights upon your forehead once you brush him gently away. That furnishes employment and amusement for him; but when he persists, Mr. Speaker, the anger of the calmest man is aroused.

Now, then, we will go over this statement and see if "the gentleman from California," the chairman of the Committee on Post-Office, had broken any agreement that he made. This I will say, and after I get through I am perfectly willing to have remain in the RECORD what the gentleman did say. I turn to page 5050, because what I find in the RECORD on the matter I suppose is a correct transcript of what transpired before that. Now, the gentleman from New York quoted what took place in relation to the insertion of this amendment.

The chairman of the committee offered an amendment in relation to the eight-hour law which I will not read. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] said: "I wish to inquire whether this applies to all offices?"

Mr. LOUD. It does; and my understanding is that the letter carriers themselves have agreed that this will be an improvement in the method of managing the business of the carrier service, by reason of the fact that on some days the mail is extremely heavy and on other days quite light. This would permit the working of the carriers eight and one-half or nine hours a day; but it is provided that they shall not work more than forty-eight hours during a week. The result would be, as suggested to me by many carriers, that on Saturdays, when the business in our cities is light, they would probably get the afternoon to themselves, that being a short working day of perhaps only four or five hours.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the amendment has been offered if it carries the remedy suggested by the gentleman from California. The reason I asked the question is because the amendment is made to a clause in the bill applying to letter carriers in new offices.

At that time the gentleman was glad to welcome this amendment, only fearful that it might not apply to the offices of the first class, a city from which the gentleman comes.

Then, on page 54, the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] in answer to the remark of the gentleman from New York said:

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes; they are. The amendment went in in such shape that I supposed it was the unanimous wish of Congress. Yesterday, I believe it was; to-day somebody has heard from a carrier, and he has changed his mind. Yesterday it was wise legislation, and to-day it can not go, because you have heard from the carriers.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Because it was put in under false pretenses.

Mr. LOUD. It was not put in under false pretenses. Yesterday it seemed to be the unanimous wish. And let me say to you in perfect good faith that I have not heard a single carrier yet object to it.

Let me say that the gentleman did not raise the point of order, and when he had finished asking the question of me, I proceeded to answer it. His right to raise the point of order had gone and the amendment was before the House. The gentleman, I know, will say that he did not attack the amendment then because I said it was acceptable to the carriers. I did make that statement, and I repeat that statement to-day that it was acceptable to the carriers as a whole.

Now, then, on the same page, in the next column, appears the following:

Mr. LOUD. I do not think I have anything further to say. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing, if the gentleman from New York wants to raise the point of order against that amendment, that we should go back to it, and let it go out on a point order. If the friends of the letter carriers do not want this provision here, I am perfectly willing that it should go out on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will give way for a request for unanimous consent that that may be done, I will raise the point of order.

Mr. LOUD. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that we may go back to that paragraph.

Mr. LOUD. Wait until we get through with this paragraph.

Now, then, that paragraph was passed. The House was in session for some time on that evening. The House was in session yesterday until about half past 3, and the gentleman had an opportunity to make this request, and yet he did not see fit to make it. Perhaps he thought it was my business to go and urge him to do it. Now, I will digress from the record. I hate to do it, because when you are dealing with a gentleman of this character—I am compelled by the rules of the House to call him a gentleman—it is dangerous to get away from the record, because then it becomes a question between man and man. But let me say that the gentleman from Massachusetts came over to this side and he heard two members say that if he did make that request they would object to it. The gentleman allowed the next day to pass until we had completed the bill.

It seems the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] could get in; it seems the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] could get in, but finally at the last moment, when the Speaker had got into the chair, then the gentleman from Massachusetts was very anxious and claimed that I had broken an agreement that he said I made with him. There were four or five hours that the Committee of the Whole were in session while the gentleman could have made his request, and yet he made no request in relation to it, because he knew it would be objected to.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, all I ask the House to do, and I make that motion, although it is a matter of small importance to me, is to insert in place of what the gentleman has so cunningly inserted what the Reporter's notes report him to have said.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish to send the Reporter's notes up to have them read?

Mr. LOUD. I do, although I do not know that anybody can read what was originally there; I can not. I will move, Mr. Speaker, to insert in the permanent RECORD what the Reporter's notes show the gentleman to have said, in place of what he has inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The motion will cover the ground.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from California will have the Reporter's notes read, showing what the gentleman from Massachusetts said.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I was about to make that request. Before that is done, Mr. Speaker, to show the courtesy that has been exhibited to me all through this matter, I wish to state that when I came into the House at quarter past 12 this morning this matter was brought to my attention by one of the members, who stated that the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] was going to take exception to my remarks as reported in the RECORD. I sent to Mr. LOUD and asked as a matter of courtesy that I be allowed to look at the original remarks which I had made upon the floor of the House, which he had in his possession, and he absolutely refused to do it.

I do not know at the present time the exact language of the remarks that I made on yesterday. The gentleman from California has not been courteous enough to read those remarks, so as to enable the House to understand their nature and to determine whether I departed from the ordinary practice of the House in making my revision. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the copy of the remarks as they were made by me on the floor of the House be read from the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The stenographer has just been ordered to produce them.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will not delay the House while that is being done if it takes any length of time to reproduce those remarks, but I will ask that they be read a little later, while I have the floor. I wish to state that what I did yesterday in the revision of my remarks was done, as I thought, in accordance with the rules of the House.

The gentleman very well knows that I persisted here all day yesterday in an attempt to get recognition so as to ask the House to go back to the paragraph amending the letter carriers' bill, in order that I might make a point of order against the amendment which was originally introduced by the gentleman. Almost every member of this House was deceived by the gentleman when on Tuesday last he introduced this amendment, because it was a clear violation of the rules of the House. It was subject to a point of order; and after the fight that the gentleman from California had made upon the floor of this House against the amendments introduced by myself and other members in favor of an increase of the salaries of clerks and letter carriers—after the fight he had made against those amendments by raising points of order, we did not think the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads would a minute after descend to the low level that he did descend to by bringing into this House an amendment repealing the eight-hour law, which was clearly out of order.

The amendment was read very quickly by the Clerk, as is the case with all amendments presented when the House is in Committee of the Whole, and, as I said a few moments ago, there were very few members who understood what the amendment really was. As I stated before, nobody supposed that the chairman of the committee would so clearly put himself beyond the pale of the rules of the House by introducing as an amendment to the Post-Office bill a provision repealing the eight-hour law; but that is just what he did. It seemed incomprehensible to me at that time that this amendment had that effect; and when I asked the gentleman if it applied to all post-offices (because when he offered that amendment it was offered to a paragraph relating to the institution of free delivery in new offices), he said, "Yes; it applied to all post-offices and that it was sanctioned by the letter carriers."

Thinking that the gentleman would not make any statement upon the floor of this House that was not true—willing to say now (I will not descend to the level that he has reached in his characterization of me) that he believed that statement to be true that the amendment was favored by the letter carriers—I offered no point of order. Later I was met in this Capitol by representatives of the Letter Carriers' Association—five of them—and they, speaking authoritatively for every letter carrier in the United States, protested against this amendment being carried in the Post-Office bill. They asked me to use every effort to get the matter properly before the House, so that the members could vote intelligently upon the proposition. [The members of the House know what followed as the gentleman from California having just stated the facts regarding what transpired in the House on the day before yesterday.]

I asked that the House be given the privilege of going back to that paragraph, and the gentleman said that he would make no objection. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], who occupied the chair at that time, said he thought that it would not be wise to break in upon the consideration of the provision regarding railway post-office clerks, which was under consideration at the time, and I waived the motion at that time so as to facilitate the business of the House. In consultation with members of the House it was then agreed that it would be better to let the Post-Office bill be completed and after the completion of the bill to ask unanimous consent to go back to that amendment. I went to the gentleman from California just as the bill was about to be passed, and he took no notice of the request I made. I walked down the aisle and stood on the floor here, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania who was in the chair at that time can verify this statement, and I think the RECORD will verify it—I called out, "Mr. Chairman, Mr. Chairman," two or three times, so as to get recognition on this matter before the House went from the Committee of the Whole into the House.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania then occupying the chair either did not see me, or else did not care to recognize me at that time, the motion was carried to discharge the committee, and accordingly the committee went back into the House. Immediately on the assembling of the House, when the Speaker had taken the chair, I rose to a question of privilege and made what I believed to be, and believe now to be, the same charges which were reported in the RECORD. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is the privilege of the members of the House and has been the practice to make such minor corrections which do not change the substance of the matter. That has been the established practice of the House since I have been a member of it, for several years past. I do not think, although I can not remember the exact language, that I departed from any established practice of the House or that I added any new charge when I did, as has been the custom here, make some changes or modifications in the language. But it is plain that the changes do not affect the substance of what I said.

I knew that the gentleman in charge of the bill had not treated this matter in what I believed to be the proper way. I felt that I was not at fault, but that he, as chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, had not done what I regarded as exact justice. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to go further. When a member in charge of a bill, the chairman of the committee, comes into the House and uses a subterfuge as to the eight-hour law, he does not do an honorable act. I make the charge here; and if members in the consideration of that proposition were misled, it was not their fault, but the fault of the chairman of that committee.

Now, I went to the Reporter's desk on yesterday afternoon immediately after the colloquy to which the gentleman refers, in which I was engaged, and asked to see the official notes of the debate. The manuscript was not ready at the time, and a portion of it was brought to my house by the messenger about 7 o'clock. I asked him to bring the remaining portions of the debate when he called again. I saw him again after 11 o'clock, and he told me that the colloquies were written on so many different sheets, the matter of which was out among a great many members, that the Printing Office was not able to get them all together up to that time, but would have them presently. The hour being late, and not wishing to put the men at the Printing Office to unnecessary trouble, I told the messenger not to bother about the matter any more. I therefore made the correction in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker, with incomplete data before me.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say this, in justice to myself: If I have said anything that was offensive to the gentleman from California or to the House or that places him in a false position, I am quite willing to retract the words. But the gentleman from California himself has invited the issue. If I have infringed the practice of the House in this regard, I am entirely willing to make whatever correction is necessary; but I insist that my language as it appears in the RECORD is practically the same as that uttered on the floor of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the original remarks used by myself on yesterday be read in this connection, so as to show precisely what was said on that occasion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Official Reporter's notes of the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The question of personal privilege is that the gentleman from California, the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, made an agreement here yesterday, in the presence of the House, before the bill was through its consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to recur to the paragraph which repeals the eight-hour law, so that the point of order could be made against it; and, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I allowed that provision to be voted on here, and had I understood the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads that this agreement—

The SPEAKER. That is the entire sentence as it appears from the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. That is correct, Mr. Speaker. The statement that I was about to make was stopped by the fall of the gavel of the Speaker, who said that this matter was not properly before the House at the time, as the matter had not come from the Committee of the Whole to the House.

Now, I contend that the language used by me on yesterday afternoon, as read by the Clerk, and the language in the RECORD, as shown in this morning's report, is practically in the same line and within the scope of the changes allowed to be made by the members of this body.

That is all I desire to say.

The SPEAKER. The motion before the House is that the original language used by the gentleman from Massachusetts be inserted in lieu of what appears in the RECORD, and that the language as it now appears on the pages referred to by the gentleman from California be stricken out. Has the Chair correctly stated the motion?

Mr. LOUD. That is correct.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the rules of the House are to be construed so that no member is allowed to have the right to change the language used by himself on the floor of the House in the correction of the RECORD or in the preparation of his remarks for publication?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly the rules of the House will not allow a member to change his remarks beyond merely verbal or grammatical changes, especially if they involve the status or the rights or position of any other member in any shape or form.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. If that is the ruling of the Chair, I will ask unanimous consent that the remarks printed in the official RECORD as coming from myself be withdrawn and the other to which I have referred be substituted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend for a moment. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that his remarks as he prepared them be withdrawn from the RECORD and the remarks as he uttered them on the floor of the House be substituted. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I only rose, Mr. Speaker, to say that while I do not take any exception to the announcement of the rule by the Chair in this case, I believe there was a general leave to print, and each gentleman might have the right as a general rule to add to his remarks.

The SPEAKER. That was not the question submitted to the Chair. The Chair does not know about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I make that motion, so as to conform to the rules of the House as given out by the Chair; and if it is understood, and the Chair so rules, that no member of the House is allowed to change his remarks in any form, then I I think——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not stated that.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts (continuing). That the RECORD of the House as printed since I have been here has been uniformly wrong.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not so stated to the gentleman from Massachusetts. Every one knows that it is allowable to make changes which affect the grammatical construction of sentences.

Mr. SHATTUC. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from California.

The question being taken, the Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. I understood the Chair to put the question first upon the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] asked unanimous consent to have done exactly what the motion of the gentl man from California [Mr. LOUD] will do. When the matter was submitted and was about to go through the House, as the Chair thinks, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] made a statement, when the regular order was demanded. A demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection to a request for unanimous consent, and brings the House to the consideration of the motion before the House. The ayes appear to have it, the ayes have it——

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I doubt that vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LOUD. I hope the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be complied with, if it pleases him or anybody else. I do not care how the matter goes out.

Mr. SHATTUC. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The ayes have it, and the motion prevails.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I doubt that vote unless the House is clear as to just how this matter proceeds. I was perfectly willing to comply with the rules of the House, and in order to do so I asked unanimous consent that the remarks as they were printed in this morning's RECORD might be omitted and the original copy of the remarks printed instead. Now, I do not understand there was any objection to that; but if there is objection and the gentleman's motion is voted upon, I wish to doubt the vote and call for a rising vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, may I be recognized for a moment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand a division?

Mr. RICHARDSON. While that is pending may I be recognized, Mr. Speaker? These divisions of opinion arise here continually about changing words. We know that right is often asked, and I think it a little ungracious now to vote this matter out, when the gentleman asks unanimous consent to do what the motion seems to do. I do not see any use in visiting any kind of discourtesy upon the gentleman. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] very properly says he has no objection. Now, why not let the change be made without undertaking to be discourteous to a member? It ought not to be done.

Mr. SHATTUC. As a courtesy to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD], who seems disposed to act fairly in this matter, I withdraw my request for regular order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope there will be no objection to letting the matter go in that way.

The SPEAKER. A motion has been pending and declared carried; still it has not passed the point where a division might be demanded. The demand for the regular order having been withdrawn, the Chair will again submit what may be termed a request for unanimous consent by both gentlemen connected with this controversy. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] to print in the RECORD the language that he used and to exclude that which was in the RECORD this morning? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, for the consideration of business under the special order.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire the attention of the House for one moment, please. I ask that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2052) granting a pension to Mary L. Stotsenburg and that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill S. 2052 and that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of pension legislation.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. LACEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the rule for Friday's use for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of this Congress the second and fourth Friday in each month, after the disposal of such business on the Speaker's table as requires reference only, shall be set apart for the consideration of private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion. The provision herein made shall be in lieu of the evening session provided for by section 2 of Rule XXVI, and section 6 of Rule XXVI and section 1 of Rule XXVI are hereby modified to conform herewith. And on each bill considered under this rule there shall be allowed ten minutes of debate in favor of the bill and ten minutes in opposition thereto. (Order made March 8.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TALBERT. I want to ask unanimous consent. There are about 200 bills on the Calendar. About one-half are for original pensions and the other half for increases. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the committee first consider those for original pensions before taking up those for increases.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I object. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

WILLIAM F. RILEY.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7975) for the relief of William F. Riley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William F. Riley, of Company K, Fifth Tennessee Volunteers, Mexican war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of all other pensions.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 7 and 8 strike out "twenty-four" and insert "sixteen;" so as to make the rating conform to precedents in similar cases.

Strike out the words "all other pensions," in line 8, and substitute therefor the words "that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY L. STOTSENSBURG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4367) granting a pension to Mary L. Stotsenburg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary L. Stotsenburg, widow of John M. Stotsenburg, late colonel of the First Nebraska Regiment, United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $100 per month in lieu of the pension she now receives.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "one hundred" and substitute therefor the word "forty."

Mr. TALBERT. I ask unanimous consent that after these bills are read the report accompanying them be read.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Or a statement of the facts made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the reports be read.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I object.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9 strike out the word "forty" and insert the words "seventy-five;" so as to read "$75 per month."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words in reference to this case. This bill is to pension the widow of the late Colonel Stotsenburg, of the First Nebraska Regiment. The report of the committee, which I hope will be read, shows for itself that the amount allowed by the committee will not provide for his widow and two children. Under the law she and her two children now draw $34 a month. The widow is in very bad health physically; she has no property, and is entirely dependent financially upon what she receives from her pension.

The circumstances surrounding the death of Colonel Stotsenburg are peculiarly sad and appeal to us more perhaps than most cases. Among all the men that fought in the war in the Philippines no man perhaps saw more bloody service than did Colonel Stotsenburg. It is saying nothing disparagingly of any of the soldiers who fought in the Philippines to say that none of them went through more bloody battles than the soldiers of the First Nebraska. They were continually on the firing line, and they probably lost more men than any other regiment that was engaged in the war. That their services were demanded is proof that they were competent for the undertaking, and that they were competent in large measure was due to the effective work of their now lamented colonel.

Colonel Stotsenburg's whole life has been given to the Government of the United States. He entered Army service, taking his education away back in 1877, and from that moment to his death he was continually in the service of his country. He was on the frontier during a great many of those years. He was in Arizona and New Mexico commanding a company of Indian scouts in the early eighties. He fought in the battle of Wounded Knee in the Sioux campaign. When the war broke out, he joined the First Nebraska Volunteers and fought in the Philippines. He was always commended for his efficient services in Indian campaigns, and in the Philippine war his efficiency was no less apparent. He was soon promoted to be colonel of his regiment, and as such he died. It was a member of the First Nebraska Regiment, as history shows, that fired the first shot in that war around Manila, and from that time, the 4th of February, until the 24d of April, when Colonel Stotsenburg was shot down, every single day, he led his regiment to battle, and every day they were bearing the brunt of battle in that campaign.

You remember that the insurgents had collected around Manila, and as they retreated they filed down the railroad tracks, retreating to the right. Colonel Stotsenburg held the right of the Army, and bore the brunt of the battle from the 4th day of February to April 23. Now let me give you a little bit of the scene surrounding his death. On that fatal day Colonel Stotsenburg had gone back to Manila to see Mrs. Stotsenburg, or rather, as I believe, he had spent the night before with her at Manila. In the morning, before he had arrived in camp, some cavalrymen were surrounded by the insurgents. Three companies of the First Nebraska were sent out to relieve the cavalry. They went out into an open rice field, and as they marched across, all of a sudden they began to be fired upon by the insurgents from behind some bamboo. The boys dropped to the ground immediately to save themselves as best they could, and for three long hours they lay there with their noses rooted in the dirt, as it were, to escape the bullets of those insurgents from their places of security behind the bamboo.

There was no way for them to get back. The officers who were in the rear tried to get the boys back, but it was disastrous for the three or four companies in the open rice fields to try to return. For three hours the record shows they lay there in the burning hot sun. Some of them succumbed to the heat and some of them were shot. Finally Colonel Stotsenburg came up from Manila, and a hurried conversation was had, and Colonel Stotsenburg started off across the rice fields. The officers told him to bring them back. He said, "The First Nebraska can't come back," and he marched across the rice fields and gave the command, "Forward; march." Those boys arose in that open field and started for the trenches of the insurgents. The Mausers of the enemy poured forth volley after volley. The sight was unobstructed and the result was deadly, but those brave Americans never flinched nor halted. They went over those intrenchments, but Colonel Stotsenburg fell, shot through the heart, in front of the enemy's breastworks.

I say that these pathetic surroundings call for particular attention of the committee to this case. I believe, too, it is our duty to look after the welfare of this widow and these children. This country is big enough, and I hope good enough, to protect and shield the bereaved wives and orphans of its fallen heroes. If we are to have a schedule for pensions, let us raise the schedule. As the country grows richer and more prosperous let us take better care of our war veterans and their dependent widows. As I said, this man has given his whole life to the Government; he has been at the front all the while; there has been no opportunity for him to save up his substance, to take care of his family when he is dead and gone. I submit that $40 a month is not a sufficient amount to maintain this woman and these children under these circumstances. She is physically unable to do any work, as the record shows.

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. TALBERT. What pension does this lady draw now?

Mr. BURKETT. Thirty dollars a month of her own and $2 apiece for the two children, aged 9 and 11 years.

Mr. TALBERT. That is the limit under the general law?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. TALBERT. What has the committee brought in?

Mr. BURKETT. Forty dollars, and I ask to have it increased to $75. The committee has raised it $6.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The committee has raised it $10. The children will get the $2 just the same.

Mr. BURKETT. She would get that under the law, anyway.

Mr. BROMWELL. Well, but the committee has raised the pension $10.

Mr. BURKETT. I understand that. Under the general law the children will get the $2 apiece, anyway. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have here a good many nice things that have been said by the officers who knew him, which I do not have time to read, but if gentlemen will take occasion to read the report, they will see what they are. I have also the report made by the Senate, and they all admit the deserving character of this claim.

Mr. GAINES. How much pension do you ask?

Mr. BURKETT. Seventy-five dollars a month.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, there are no words I could utter which would give sufficient praise to Colonel Stotsenburg and the other gallant officers who have given up their lives for their country, nor do I think it is necessary to occupy the time of this House in attempting it. I bow to no man in my feelings of patriotism and love for them. But there is another question that should be considered by this House, and ought to be considered by the country, and that is the raising of these pensions. In my judgment it was not the intention of the general law, nor is it the intention of these special acts, to grant large annuities to widows or to the soldiers themselves.

The committee over which I have the honor to preside has carefully gone into this matter, taken into consideration the number of claims they would have to pass upon, and fixed upon a rule which, in their judgment, they deem is equitable and just. As I have stated before to the members of this House, that committee has now before it 80 claims for increase of pensions of the widows of officers, and it has but one for the widow of a private. True, the officers performed gallant services, accomplished great deeds of heroism, but they would not have brought to our arms the successes they have had without the boys.

I want to say to you that we ought to give to all of these cases equitable and fair consideration, and not pick out one case that has worked upon the sympathies of members and follow that sympathy, but we should keep to the line laid out by the committee and do substantial justice to all. I am in receipt of letters from all over the country, from applicants, asking that this Congress do not go too far in raising the pensions for the widows of officers. We have considered carefully this claim. She now gets $30 a month under the general law, and we have advanced it 33⅓ per cent and given her what the committee considered is the maximum amount that any widow ought to receive in that grade, and I trust that this committee will vote down this amendment and keep on that line that we have so laid out in the past—keep this down to an equitable point, and not by spasmodic acts give to one $75 and to another, equally meritorious, $30, simply because some able member has drawn particular attention of the House to the gallant record of the officer.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to indorse——

Mr. GIBSON. I rise to a question of order. The rule provides, I believe, that there shall be only ten minutes' debate on each side upon any one bill. Has not that limit been reached?

Several MEMBERS. There is no such rule.

Mr. GIBSON. If that be the rule, I ask that it be enforced.

Mr. TALBERT. Rip Van Winkle again!

Mr. GIBSON. I am not directing my point particularly at the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TALBERT. But I say you have been asleep. That is not the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment has been exhausted under the rule.

Mr. SIMS. There is no such rule as that.

Mr. GIBSON. I call for the enforcement of the rule if there be one. I do not want that we shall spend all day on one bill.

Mr. SIMS. The clause to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON] has reference was reported as part of the proposed rule, but was withdrawn in the House by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was misinformed. The printed copy of the rule to which his attention was referred was erroneous. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] is recognized.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, as I was going on to say when interrupted by the giant from Tennessee [laughter], I indorse what the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] has said. I have no doubt that every word which the gentleman from Nebraska uttered in regard to this distinguished officer is true. He was a grand, a magnificent officer. But, Mr. Chairman, I am absolutely opposed to discrimination between the widows of private soldiers and the widows of officers. I would like to ask whether the widow of an officer suffers any more than the widow of a private soldier. I want to raise my voice here in the interests of the men who stood in the trenches and always bore the heat and burden of the day and their widows and children, while many times the officers were in bomb-proof positions or away behind under a tree. Of course we all recognize rank and the gallant services of officers, but no reason whatever can be given why the poor widow of a poor private should not receive as much consideration, so to speak, as the widow of an officer. Think of the position of the private soldier; how his simple, heroic, disinterested valor eclipsed often the laurels of an officer, or a mere conqueror. It requires as much for one widow as another under the same circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, I only wanted to say this much and to indorse what has been said by the gentleman from New Jersey. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska will be voted down and that this bill will be allowed to stand as the committee has brought it in; and in doing this I want to say that the law has made a distinction between the rank and file, and the committee are only carrying out the distinction. The amount ought not to be raised. The law allows $30 and the committee has raised it to $40, and it should stand so.

Mr. GIBSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is the rule as printed on the Calendar for Friday, April 27, correct or incorrect?

The CHAIRMAN. It is incorrect. The proposition was originally offered in that form, but as finally adopted by the House the limitation of time was omitted.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I move to amend by striking out "$75" and inserting "$50."

Mr. BROMWELL. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. An amendment to an amendment is already pending. The question is now upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska to the amendment reported by the committee.

The question being taken, the amendment to the amendment was rejected, there being—ayes 21, noes 51.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I heartily approve the patriotic utterances of the gentleman from Nebraska. General Stotsenburg was an Indianian who emigrated to Nebraska. During the war he performed all the magnificent service of which the gentleman from that State has spoken. I also approve in the main all that has been said by the chairman of the committee; and I am inclined to welcome the patriotic utterances of my friend from South Carolina, and hope he will stand with us all day.

But, Mr. Chairman, while indorsing what has been said by the gentleman from Nebraska, I can not stand here and see this Committee of the Whole adopt the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions—not so much because I object to that amendment; but here is a Senate bill which I sought unanimous consent to have considered in order that it might pass and that this widow might get something without further delay. The Senate has passed the bill pensioning the widow of this gallant soldier at the little sum—and I say "little" advisedly—of $50; and because the committee over which the gentleman presides has for some reason adopted the rule that these pensions should be limited to $40, some gentlemen here are willing to run the risk of the bill failing in conference or of its being entirely turned down in the Senate.

Shall this gallant soldier, Mr. Chairman, who did not skulk behind the trenches, but who led the boys in the open field in that Spanish war and who faced death on the battlefield, be treated with no more consideration than men who, while they were in the service, were not brought into such dangerous proximity to their foe as he was? He faced death on the field of battle. Now, the committee say that they carry out a rule which they have inaugurated in the committee, and they will give him but $40 a month pension. If that was an original proposition I would not have much to say about it. But here is a soldier who meets absolutely even all of the requirements of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] and all of the requirements of American patriotism; and the Senate has seen fit to do itself the honor of proposing a bill which gives him $50 a month, and the House is asked to reduce that sum to but $40 a month and put it in a position where there is delay and possibly defeat for the bill altogether.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us be consistent and practical, at least. I agree with gentlemen that it is our duty to protect the Treasury. But let us be consistent, as suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska, who refers to the patriotism of the people. I believe in consistency in these matters. I believe, though, that we ought to do justice while we are being consistent. It is not patriotic to stand by the committee merely for the sake of consistency. The question goes far beyond that. Let us do the practical thing and give to the widow and children of this soldier the amount that the Senate deems they ought to receive for the gallant services rendered by him. Let us give them what will not only be a substantial recognition of the gallant services of this officer, but which will be to the widow and the children a substantial support.

I did not vote for the motion which proposed to fix the amount at $75, but I hope the House will adopt the Senate bill, and I will myself, at the proper time, offer an amendment to the bill to meet what I believe to be the requirements of this case.

Mr. NEVILLE. What is the amount proposed by the gentleman?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Fifty dollars; the amount in the bill as it came from the Senate.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana will not be adopted.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me, I have not made an amendment. I was only stating, in answer to an inquiry, what the amount proposed here was.

Mr. NEVILLE. That bill, as I understand it, however, is not on the Calendar.

Mr. BROMWELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, this House ought to be consistent, as gentlemen say, in dealing with these matters——

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I had the impression that the Senate bill was here, but I am informed that it is not. If the gentleman will yield, therefore, I desire to offer an amendment to strike out in line 8 the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Mr. BROMWELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the committee will not agree to this amendment. If this was the only case reported by the Pensions Committee for the action of the House, I might not raise my voice in opposition to the proposition. I concede that the services of this officer were gallant and most distinguished. I concede that if this House were to consider that case solely and independently there might be justice in the proposition of which we have heard. I concede further that if this were the only case presented for our action we might not oppose it, but in a patriotic impulse give either $50 or $75 or $100 a month, as the case might be, out of the generosity of our hearts and our feeling for this gallant officer on this floor. But this is not the only case that we are to consider.

We can not afford to set such a dangerous precedent. We have already started upon the consideration of cases reported from the Pensions Committee and the other committee which deals with kindred subjects, and the House will remember that we had the same fight in this body upon the Capron cases a few days ago, and the Committee of the Whole stood by the action of the Committee on Pensions and the rule was fixed in those cases. Now, there is just as much merit in going beyond the amount fixed by the committee on the two Capron cases as there is in this Stotsenburg case. They were equally meritorious. Both the officers named in the bills then presented were gallant and meritorious, and lost their lives in the service of the country; and yet the House, in fixing the pension, in justice and fairness to all of the pensioners on the roll, adopted the action of the Pension Committee, accepted the report of the committee, and adopted as their action in that case what I believed to be the true rule to apply in all of these cases.

Not only that, but we find upon the Calendar, following the case of Stotsenburg, other cases reported by the Pension Committee, and I will state to the gentleman from Indiana and to the gentleman from Nebraska that they are equal in merit in every respect as the Stotsenburg case, and yet the committee have failed to report anything like the amount asked in this case and have felt it to be their duty to cut the amounts down. We think it was their duty, and they have faithfully performed that duty in not singling out particular cases to give large pensions, and allow those who do not come here with influence or who have not a sufficient pull to get large pensions and receive only what the general law gives if they came within the provisions of the law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the Senate asked for a conference on the Capron cases. Will the gentleman state whether any agreement has been reached by the conferees on those bills?

Mr. BROMWELL. I want to say that the conference has not yet been held, for the reason that members of the conference committee in the Senate are out of the city.

Mr. MANN. I was going to suggest that any action taken in those cases might help us to determine what action we ought to take in this case if any change was made.

Mr. BROMWELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Pensions Committee has well said that we have before that committee many cases of officers' widows, growing out of this recent war. Out of the thousands, perhaps, that ought to come to us, we have but one case of a man who fought in the ranks as a private. Does this House propose to take the pension which is allowed to a private or the widow of a private and run it up from $12 to $50? The men who were behind Colonel Stotsenburg have just as much claim upon the consideration of this House as Colonel Stotsenburg. There were men in the front rank right behind Colonel Stotsenburg who were exposed to just as much danger, men who gave up their lives as he gave up his, and whose widows will get but $12 a month. Does this House propose to change the general law with reference to pensions, and say that in every one of the cases of those privates we shall vote to increase the pension allowed under the general law from $12 to twenty-five, thirty, or fifty dollars?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BROMWELL. Excuse me just a minute. Under the general law this widow has been given a pension. That pension has been increased by the committee 33⅓ per cent—from $30 a month to $40 a month.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. That is just the question I wanted to ask about.

Mr. BROMWELL. We give the maximum, and $4 more for the two children.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. By this very bill you are changing the law, and if you change the law to make it forty, you will not violate the principle any more by making it fifty.

Mr. BROMWELL. We change the law by every bill that either of these committees brings in the House. If we were not changing the law, they would not be there. But the question is whether in changing the law we ought to make discriminations that will ultimately come back to this House to trouble us? Now, I hope that the report of the Pensions Committee will be adhered to and the amendment voted down.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I think debate on this amendment is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. NEVILLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to talk upon this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NEVILLE] asks for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEVILLE. Mr. Chairman, in departing from the law to increase this pension there is nothing that should be urged here as a reason for defeating this amendment upon the ground that there are other widows whose claims are upon this Calendar. I agree with my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] that the private or the widow of a private ought to have just as large a pension as the widow of an officer. In free America I make no distinction upon the question of rank or standing of any individual, but I say that in every instance, whenever a man has gone forth to battle for the purpose of carrying out the will of the majority of the people of this country, as demanded by the Administration that sent him, when he bares his breast to the bullet of an enemy of the country and is stricken down, his widow and his fatherless children ought not to suffer.

That widow should be supported and those children should be educated, and so I am in favor of this amendment that this should be increased to $50 a month, so that it will accord with the provisions of the Senate bill.

Now, I did not vote upon the question of the $75 amendment, because I understood that there was an absolute rule in the Senate which would prevent a pension of over $50 a month to this widow, and for another reason, because I believe that $50 a month for this widow, together with the amounts which her children receive, would enable her not only to educate her children but to live without coming to want.

I believe in every instance that every old soldier who has fought for the flag of his country and helped to keep up its free institutions should be recognized to the extent that when he dies his orphan children shall not be left to the cold charity of the people of this or any other country. But this Government ought to maintain those children, and ought to maintain the widow, especially if, as in this case, she is incapacitated by reason of physical disabilities to work for her own livelihood or to help maintain her children. The Senate bill granting this widow a pension of $50 a month was passed by the Senate a litttle over three months ago, and has been hung up in the Pensions Committee of this House since that time. Now, for that reason, I believe that if this forty-dollar provision in this House bill goes through the House in the shape that it is now, and it goes to the Senate, the Senate will demand that $50 be reinstated or that the Senate bill should pass.

Now then if we pass the House bill, it has got to run the gauntlet of the Senate; but if we declare for this amendment by a majority vote of this committee, and then when we get into the House move to discharge the Pension Committee from the further consideration of the bill and substitute the Senate bill, it will become a law at once, and will only have to obtain the President's signature. If we take the other course, the bill will be hung up in the Senate, and by reason of that fact this poor widow will not get her pension as promptly at least as she ought to. I hope that the committee amendment will be voted down, and that the provision for $50 will be inserted, and then when we get back into the House that the Senate bill will be substituted, and it can pass and become law without danger of injuring the prospect of this poor widow promptly getting what justice demands that she should have.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I ask that I may be recognized for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote in favor of giving this pension of $50 a month, and shall do so because I believe that this widow is entitled to it under the operation of the general rule. That rule is where exceptional service is rendered a recognition should be made of it. Had Colonel Stotsenburg lived he would have been brevetted or received a medal of honor for the services rendered on the day that he met his death. For his services on that day and for his meritorious and gallant services during the campaign he would have received substantial promotion had he lived. But his life having been lost, I think that the same rule would justify us in giving an exceptional pension to his widow in recognition of his exceptional services. Now, it has been argued that we should not give it to this widow because she is the widow of an officer. I do not think that the question of rank should have anything to do with it. It is not a question of whether a man is an officer or a private. It is the character of the service which has been rendered; not the rank, but the exceptional character of the service.

Now, some question has been raised here about influence; that pensions should not be given to those having special influence. There has been no influence in this case that I know of. I did not know Colonel Stotsenburg had a wife until I found this bill was up; but I had known of his service as deserving special recognition, and this is the only way in which we can give it.

Mr. SHATTUC. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted, and the regular order is demanded.

Mr. ATWATER. I ask for five minutes.

Mr. SHATTUC. You can have it on the next bill. I will have to object on this bill.

Mr. SIMS. It is this bill that he wants to talk about.

Mr. SHATTUC. I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SHATTUC. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 22.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The question was taken on ordering tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Ten gentlemen have risen—not a sufficient number; tellers are refused; the ayes have it, and the amendment to the amendment is agreed to. The question is upon the amendment as amended.

The question was taken; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MANN. I rise for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Pensions a question on a point that was stated by him. If the House will pardon me, I would like to call his attention to the statement made by him a few moments ago. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

ANNA H. TUPPER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 192) granting an increase of pension to Anna H. Tupper.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Anna H. Tupper, widow of Tullins C. Tupper, late major of the Sixth United States Cavalry, upon the pension roll at the rate of $50 per month, such amount to be in lieu of the pension now received by her.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I have not the report on that bill on my desk, and I ask that the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks that the report be read in his time. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. BROMWELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 192) granting an increase of pension to Anna H. Tupper, beg leave to submit the following report and recommend that said bill do pass with amendments:

The claimant is the widow of the late Tullins C. Tupper, major, Sixth United States Cavalry, who died September 1, 1898, on the retired list, from disease of heart incurred in the service and line of duty.

This officer entered the service as private of Troop E, Sixth United States Cavalry, July 19, 1861; promoted second lieutenant, Sixth Cavalry, September 22, 1862; first lieutenant, September 28, 1864; captain, September 17, 1867, and major, October 19, 1887. He served with his regiment in the Army of the Potomac from September, 1862, to December, 1864. Subsequently he rendered arduous service at different points on the Western and Southwestern frontier, including participation in Indian wars up to and including the Sioux campaign in South Dakota in 1891.

The claimant is now receiving a pension of $25 per month. She is well advanced in years, and the evidence shows that she has very little means for the support of herself and young daughter.

Major Tupper's record was a most gallant one, and he was held in high esteem by his fellow-officers.

The following letter from Maj. Gen. Nelson A. Miles is one of many of the same tenor filed with your committee:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, December 16, 1899.

DEAR SIR: The military records of the War Department show that Tullins C. Tupper, late major, United States Army, from the time he entered the service of his country, July 19, 1861, as a private soldier, until his retirement in July, 1893, as major, made a record as a soldier rarely excelled. His gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of Gettysburg, and throughout the war of the rebellion, and the arduous duties devolving upon him, and of which he acquitted himself most creditably, in the Sioux campaign, made a record most worthy of emulation. His retirement from the service, disabled by sickness, was a loss to our Government, to whose service he was so devoted. His death in September, 1898, after a long and useful life spent in the service of his country, leaves his widow, it appears, a proper subject for consideration, and I earnestly recommend, should she apply for a pension, that you give the subject that attention and care as her interests and that of the Government may demand.

Very respectfully,
NELSON A. MILES,
Major-General, Commanding United States Army.

Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

In view of the foregoing facts and in the light of numerous precedents your committee believe that a substantial increase of the claimant's present allowance of pension is fully justified, and the passage of the bill is therefore recommended, with the following amendments:

In line 4, after the word "place," insert "on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 6 strike out "upon the pension roll" and insert in lieu thereof "and pay her a pension."

In line 6 strike out "fifty" and substitute therefor "thirty-five."

In line 7 strike out "such amount to be."

In lines 7 and 8 strike out "the pension now received by her" and substitute therefor the words "that she is now receiving."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of addressing myself to this bill. I shall not detain the committee, but I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions to a statement made by him a few moments ago upon the last bill.

That statement was that if the bill should pass at the rate of $40 a month the two minor children of the widow would be entitled to an additional pension of $2 a month each, or that the mother would be entitled to $4 a month for the two children. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of that committee to order No. 365, issued March 1, 1899, which reads in this way:

In all special acts granting pensions to widows in which the amount of pension is fixed by special act no increase will be allowed for minor children unless provided for in said act.

Which order was issued by the Commissioner of Pensions and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and, as I understand, is still in force. I simply call the attention of the chairman of the committee to that fact, because I heard that statement made on two Fridays here that the children would be allowed the additional pension.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I will say that the Committee on Pensions has no desire to take away from that widow any money received for the children, nor do they understand that that money is taken away. The language in this bill, as I understand it, is the language that the Department of Pensions approved of, to give the pension or whatever rate may be fixed by Congress to her, and not disturb that which is allowed for the children.

Mr. MANN. I have no desire to enter into a controversy with the gentleman upon this matter, but I call his attention to the fact that the ruling of the Department that they will not allow pensions for the benefit of children where a special act is passed. That ruling is adhered to.

Mr. SIMS. Does that mean where the pension is granted by a special act originally, or where it is granted under the general law and then increased?

Mr. MANN. This refers to a pension granted by special act in lieu of the pension now received, and it covers, I understand, the case we have just had. In other words, the $2 a month is granted to the mother of the children as long as she lives, and when you grant a pension to the mother it wipes out the pension to the children.

Mr. SIMS. I am asking for information. Then it would be $40 instead of $34?

Mr. MANN. Well, that bill has been disposed of——

Mr. SIMS. I mean it would be $50 instead of $34, as it is now.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LUCY D. YOUNG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 527) granting a pension to Lucy D. Young.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucy D. Young, foster mother of W. Harlan Young, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, were read:

In line 6, after the word "Young," insert "late of Company I, First Illinois Infantry Volunteers, war with Spain."

Insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That in the event of the filing of an application for pension by the father of the deceased soldier, this pension shall be suspended pending the settlement of the said application, and if the father is granted a pension the allowance to the foster mother under this act shall cease and terminate from the date of such suspension; otherwise payment of this pension shall be resumed from the date of such suspension and shall continue in full force and effect."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM T. PRATT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5553) to correct the military record of William T. Pratt.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the record of William T. Pratt, late a private of Company A, Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to issue a certificate of honorable discharge.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

J. B. WETHERBEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8422) granting a pension to J. B. Wetherbee.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of J. B. Wetherbee, a cook in the employ of Company G, First Regiment Washington Volunteers, who was shot and permanently disabled near Paco Church, Manila, Philippine Islands February 5, 1899, while assisting, at the request of the officer in charge, in raising a telegraph wire to establish communications between certain points as soon as possible, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 a month.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Pensions were read:

Strike out the initial "J," where it occurs in the title and body of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the word "John."

After the word "roll," in line 4, insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

After the word "Washington," in line 6, insert "Infantry."

In lines 6 and 7 strike out "who was shot and permanently disabled," and substitute therefor the words "and pay him a pension for wounds received."

Strike out all from line 9 to the end of the bill, inclusive.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the report in this case be printed.

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8422) granting a pension to J. B. Wetherbee, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass with amendments.

The claimant, John B. Wetherbee, was a cook in the employ of Company G, First Regiment Washington Volunteers, and while so serving with the company in the Philippine Islands was severely injured by a gunshot wound of the back and spine at Paco Church, near Manila, while serving in the ranks and assisting in the construction of a telegraph line.

The following is an official report from the War Department regarding the occurrence:

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 16, 1900.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 10th instant, addressed to the Surgeon-General of the Army and by him transmitted to this office, where it was received yesterday, in which letter you request a copy of the report of the medical treatment of J. B. Wetherbee, who was engaged as cook for Company G, First Regiment Washington Volunteers, and was wounded at Paco Church, Manila, February 5, 1899, a report of whose medical treatment, made at the Presidio, Cal., it is stated, has been placed on file in this Department, I beg to state that an examination has been made of all records on file deemed likely to afford information in the case, but the special report referred to has not been found on file.

It appears from the records, however, that J. B. Weatherby, whose name also appears upon the records as Wetherbee, civilian cook, Company G, First Washington Infantry Volunteers, was wounded severely by a gunshot wound of the back and spine at Paco, Manila, Philippine Islands, February 5, 1899, and it is stated that he fought in the ranks with Company G, although he was not an enlisted man.

The records also show that he was treated in various hospitals, including the general hospital at Presidio, San Francisco, from February 5, 1899, to November 1, 1899, for gunshot wound, "Mauser," severe, center spinal column, which produced partial paralysis of the lower limbs. It is stated on the records that there was no evidence of the exit of the bullet, and that it was not found by the X ray.

Very respectfully,
JOHN TWEEDALE,
Acting Chief Record and Pension Office.

Hon. W. L. JONES,
House of Representatives.

A petition signed by large numbers of the officers and men of the First Washington Volunteer Infantry accompanies the bill and sets forth that at the time claimant received his wound he was standing on the stone bridge assisting members of the Signal Corps to raise a telegraph wire. Previous to this he, with Company D, First Washington Volunteers, was engaged in firing into the church, from which our men were receiving a fire from the enemy. Claimant was requested by the officer in charge of the detail engaged in raising the wire to assist them, he being told that it was desired to establish communication between certain points as soon as possible. While thus engaged claimant was wounded by a bullet fired by an insurgent, presumably from a house near by.

The following are sworn statements by claimant and medical officers, showing the circumstances, and also setting forth the nature and extent of the wound:

I, J. B. Weatherbee, make the following statement:

I joined the regiment the 1st day of November, 1898, at Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, acting in the capacity of cook of Company G, First Washington Volunteer Infantry. I went to Manila with the regiment, acting in that capacity up to February 5, 1899. On January 8, 1899, I was issued arms and ammunition by the company commander, Capt. M. Ellrich, of Company G, First Washington Volunteers, as the condition at that time was such that every able-bodied man was needed to defend the position. From that time until February 5, 1899, I was called on for outpost duty the same as any enlisted man in the regiment. On February 5, at the battle of Paco Church, I was ordered by an officer of the United States Signal Corps to assist in establishing telegraphic communications with the lines, and while in the act of raising a telegraph wire I was struck by a bullet in the back, fired by one of the insurgents, and fell helpless.

I was carried from the field by Albert Anderson and Lieutenant Bryan of the First Washington, and lay in the First Reserve Hospital at Manila until March 28, 1899, then in the Second Reserve Hospital until June 2, 1899. During those months I lay completely paralyzed and perfectly helpless as regards the use of my lower limbs, and suffered intense pain. From June 2 to August 2 I was aboard the hospital ship Relief, reaching San Francisco August 2, 1899, and being sent to the hospital at Presidio. The sea voyage and change of climate improved my physical condition so that I could be lifted from my bed, and by the assistance of persons or crutches move a little. Reference to the hospital reports of Manila and the Presidio will show the exact condition more completely than I could state it here. There is among those reports a photograph of the wound as shown by the X-rays. Surgeons have always refused to operate, considering that the location of the ball so near the heart and spine renders an operation dangerous and probably fatal, and all surgeons have refused to undertake the risk of performing it.

Carried in the arms of my comrades, I was taken aboard the ship Queen at San Francisco on November 4, 1899, and brought to Seattle; was carried in their arms from steamer to carriage and from carriage to hospital, and the Red Cross and Fortson Relief Corps (a similar organization) have undertaken the entire charge of my expenses up to this time. On November 25, 1899, I was removed from the hospital to a private residence, but am obliged to have the care of a nurse. My physical condition is improved; my helplessness is not so great as during the first eight months after I was wounded, but I am entirely unable to perform any labor of any kind or do the least thing toward my own support, and am obliged to have assistance even in caring for me personally.

I have no real estate or personal property that will aid me in my support, and while I have living relatives, they are not financially able to assist me in the least degree. My sole income since November, 1898, has been one month's pay as cook of Company G, First Washington Volunteer Infantry, after reaching Manila, and $100, contributed largely by the enlisted men of Company G. The Red Cross and Fortsen Relief Corps have, as I stated before, assumed all responsibility for my care and attention since I reached Seattle, November 6. I am a single man and have no one except myself dependent upon me. I have no assurance from any physician who has ever examined my case, in the United States service or out of it, that I will be able to support myself again. While it is evident that my physical condition is improving, it does not place me in a condition to do anything for my own support at the present time.

The surgeons in charge of my case from the time I was wounded until I left the hospital at the Presidio were Major Crosby, United States Army, in charge of the First Reserve Hospital at Manila, and Major Fitzgerald, of the Thirteenth Minnesota Volunteers; at the Second Reserve Hospital at Manila was Capt. Frank B. Kiefer, surgeon, United States Army; on the hospital ship Relief was Major Bradley; at the Presidio hospital were Colonel Gerard and former regimental doctor, Maj. L. R. Dawson, whose reports in the War Department will give a more detailed account of my case than I can give or secure from them, scattered as they are out of the reach of my knowledge of their whereabouts. Maj. L. R. Dawson examined me at Manila at the First Reserve Hospital, and on about the 1st day of February, 1900, examined me at Seattle, Wash. His affidavit and that of Dr. A. B. Kibbe accompany this paper.

Praying that the Government for which I fought will recognize my great need and reward my services by relieving me from dependence upon the charity of others, I am,

J. B. WETHERBEE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 8th day of March, 1900.

[SEAL.] H. J. RAMSEY,

Notary Public in and for the State of Washington, residing at Seattle.

SEATTLE, WASH., February 21, 1900.

John B. Wetherbee, civilian cook of G Company, First Washington Infantry, United States Volunteers, was wounded in the back during general engagement of February 5, 1899, near Paco Church, Manila, Philippine Islands. I saw him two days later in ward 2 of the First Reserve Hospital, Manila, Philippine Islands, at which time he was completely paralyzed from the hips down, with no control of bowels or bladder.

He was in the First Reserve Hospital a long time, and was sent thence to the general hospital at the Presidio of San Francisco, Cal. He came to Seattle with a part of the First Washington Infantry, United States Volunteers, on the steamship Queen of the Pacific, and was sent to the Seattle General Hospital for a time by the Seattle Red Cross Society.

About the 1st day of February I examined him, with Dr. A. B. Kibbe, by the Roentgen ray in the office of Dr. Kibbe. The fluoroscope showed a projection or protrusion on the left side of the spine at level of fourth or fifth dorsal vertebra, which Dr. Kibbe and myself both regarded as the missile which inflicted the wound, surrounded by an inflammatory thickening or exudate. The scar of the wound of entrance was about 2 inches to the right of the spinous processes, and about 1½ inches lower than the site of the missile, which corroborated his statement that his arms were raised above his head at the moment he received the wound.

At this time he was able to stand alone, supported by his crutches, and, with their support, to walk alone a short distance. The knee jerk was exaggerated decidedly in both legs. The left knee was still rather stiff, and the muscles of both legs considerably atrophied.

LEWIS R. DAWSON, M. D.,

Late Major-Surgeon, First Washington Infantry, U. S. V.

The foregoing subscribed and sworn to before me by said Lewis R. Dawson this 21st day of February, 1900.

[SEAL.] H. J. RAMSEY,

Notary Public in and for the State of Washington, residing at Seattle.

SEATTLE, March 1, 1900.

With reference to the case of John B. Wetherbee, described in full by Dr. L. R. Dawson, I can say that I also examined Mr. Wetherbee with the fluoroscope and found the same conditions described by Dr. Dawson, and that I fully concur with his diagnosis and opinions in the case.

ALFRED B. KIBBE, M. D.

The foregoing subscribed and sworn to before me by said Alfred B. Kibbe this 1st day of March, 1900.

H. J. RAMSEY,

Notary Public in and for the State of Washington, residing at Seattle.

Other evidence accompanying the bill shows that claimant is practically a helpless cripple from his wound, and that he has no means whatever, but is dependent upon the Red Cross Society and other charitable organizations at Seattle, Wash., where he now resides. Not being an enlisted man, Mr. Wetherbee can obtain no relief under existing pension laws, but in view of the foregoing facts your committee are of the opinion that the passage of this bill would be an act of justice and right.

The following amendments are recommended:

Strike out the initial "J," where it occurs in the title and body of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the word "John."

After the word "roll," in line 4, insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

After the word "Washington," in line 6, insert "Infantry."

In lines 6 and 7 strike out "who was shot and permanently disabled," and substitute therefore the words, "and pay him a pension for wounds received."

Strike out all from line 9 to the end of the bill, inclusive.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

RHODA A. PATMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7022) to pension Rhoda A. Patman.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Rhoda A. Patman, widow of John J. Patman, late a private in Capt. William M. Anderson's Company, Maj. James Woods's Battalion, Georgia Volunteers, in the Indian war of 1836, and allow her a pension rated at $12 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, were read:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Rhoda A. Patman."

In line 6 change the initial "M." in Captain Anderson's name to "U."

In line 9 strike out "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight;" so as to make the rating conform to that allowed by the general law.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE J. TITCOMB.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 533) to remove the charge of desertion against George J. Titcomb and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against George J. Titcomb, late of the Sixth Battery Massachusetts Volunteer Light Artillery, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN M. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5181) to increase the pension of John M. Smith.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of John M. Smith, late a private in Company H, First Tennessee Regiment Volunteers (Mexican war), from $12, the amount now received by said Smith under pension certificate No. 13968, to $25 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, were read:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John M. Smith."

In line 4 strike out "increase the pension" and substitute therefor the words "place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name."

Strike out all in the bill after the words "(Mexican war)," in line 6, and substitute in lieu thereof the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ISABEL B. HAMILTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 528) granting a pension to Isabel B. Hamilton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isabel B. Hamilton, of Omaha, Nebr., at the rate of $75 per month, in lieu of any pension she may be receiving as the widow of the late John M. Hamilton, lieutenant-colonel of the Ninth United States Cavalry.

The amendments reported by the committee were read and agreed to, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Isabel B. Hamilton."

In lines 6, 7, and 8 strike out "of Omaha, Nebr., at the rate of $75 per month in lieu of any pension she may be receiving as the."

Add at the end of the bill the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY A. C. KAIGLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 3514) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. M. A. C. Kaigler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Mrs. M. A. C. Kaigler, of Macon County, Ga., now on the pension roll as the widow of William Kaigler, a soldier of the Mexican war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension of $8 per month she is now receiving.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, and agreed to, as follows:

Strike out "Mrs. M." wherever it occurs in the title and body of the bill and substitute therefor the word "Mary."

In line 4, after the words "directed to," strike out "increase the pension of" and substitute therefor the words "place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of."

In lines 5 and 6 strike out "of Macon County, Ga., now on the pension roll as the."

In line 6, after the word "Kaigler," strike out "a soldier of the" and insert in lieu thereof "late of Company D, First Georgia Infantry Volunteers."

In line 7 strike out "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve," so as to fix the rating at $12 per month.

Strike out all in the bill after the word "month," in line 8, and substitute therefor the words "in lieu of that she is now receiving."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ALVIN SEAGROVES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9202) granting a pension to Alvin Seagroves, late private in Company L, Second Arkansas Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and instructed to place the name of Alvin Seagroves, late private in Company L, Second Arkansas Volunteer Cavalry, on the pension roll, and grant him a pension at $14 per month.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, and agreed to, as follows:

Strike out all in line 3 after the word "Interior" and all in lines 4, 5, 6, and 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alvin Seagroves, late of Company L, Second Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $14 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Alvin Seagroves."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

HENRY O'CONNOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8888) granting a pension to Henry O'Connor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry O'Connor, late member of Company A, First Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 a month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, and agreed to, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "member of Company A, First" and insert in lieu thereof the words "major Thirty-fifth."

In line 7 strike out the word "Volunteers;" and in the same line, before the word "Infantry," insert the word "Volunteer."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Henry O'Connor."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

NANCY W. HADLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8107) granting a pension to Nancy W. Hadley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Nancy W. Hadley, widow of Edwin Hadley, deceased, late captain of Company C, Twenty-sixth Michigan Infantry, and pay her a pension of $17 per month.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out the word "upon" and insert in lieu thereof the word "on."

In the same line, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 5 strike out the word "deceased."

In line 6 strike out the word "of."

In the same line strike out the letter "C" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "E."

In the same line, before the word "Michigan," insert the word "Regiment."

In the same line, before the word "Infantry," insert the word "Volunteer."

In line 7 strike out all after the word "pension" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of $8 per month, such pension to cease upon proof that the officer is still living."

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that there be a separate vote on the last amendment of the committee, striking out the provision of the bill as reported, for a pension at $17 a month, and inserting a provision for $8 a month. The report in this case shows that the husband of this lady was a captain of Company E, Twenty-sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteers. He served from August 14, 1862, until December 19, 1864, when he resigned on account of injuries received in the service, having been wounded in the thigh, which made him lame. He received a pension from the time of his discharge until 1869, when, as an honorable soldier, being in a condition to make a living by the practice of his profession as a lawyer, he declined to accept any further payments of pension.

Captain Hadley was well known to me. The proofs before the committee show that in 1883 he left his home and has never since been heard from. After his absence had continued seven years the insurance company in which his life was insured paid to Mrs. Hadley a policy of $5,000. The report shows that she has a little home in Ann Arbor, Mich., valued at $5,000, and mortgaged for $3,000; that she depends for her livelihood upon her daily labor. She keeps a boarding house to maintain herself. Yet the Commissioner of Pensions for eleven years has been denying her application for pension on the ground that Captain Hadley is still living. Now, it seems to me that the husband, having been the captain of a company, having been wounded in the service, and his widow being 60 years of age and in absolute need, it is but scant justice to allow her the meager pension of $8 a month. I ask, therefore, that she be allowed the amount named in the bill—$17 a month.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan; I merely desire to state why this report is as it is.

This gentleman left his home in 1883, and has not been heard from since. Although there is a legal presumption of his death, there is not a particle of evidence that, if dead, he died of disease contracted in the service. We recommend that this widow be allowed a pension of $8 a month regardless of the question whether the death of her husband resulted from a disease of service origin. If the Committee of the Whole sees fit to raise the pension so as to correspond with the rank of the officer, I am not here to oppose it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to strike out "$8" and insert "$17."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments as amended were adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY E. VISHION.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8997) granting a pension to Mary E. Vishion.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mary E. Vishion, an Army nurse, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

Strike out all after the word "and," in line 3, and all in lines 4, 5, and 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary E. Vishion, late a nurse in the Medical Department, United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I see by the report which I have on my desk here that there is no record anywhere of this claimant having been in the employment of the Government, and I should be glad to have a statement from the gentleman who has the bill in charge, or from the chairman of the committee, in regard to the matter. The report says there is no record that she was ever employed as an Army nurse.

Mr. SULLOWAY. She was not in the service in the sense of receiving compensation from the Government; but the report does show that she served longer than would have been necessary, if she had been receiving compensation out of the Treasury, to have made her pensionable. The fact that she served and performed duty is proved beyond all question.

Mr. TALBERT. I did not read the whole report. I simply saw that much of it. On the gentleman's statement, I have no objection.

Mr. SULLOWAY. The gentleman will see that if he reads the whole report.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM FEEK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8799) granting an increase of pension to William Teek.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Teek, late of Company F, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 6 strike out "Teek" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Feek."

In line 7, before the word "Infantry," insert the word "Volunteer."

Also amend title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William Feek."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARIA B. WOOLSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7391) granting a pension to Maria B. Woolson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Maria B. Woolson, widow of John S. Woolson, late assistant paymaster of the United States Navy, on the pension roll of the United States and pay to her a pension at the rate of $25 per month, subject to the rules and regulations of the Pension Office.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4, after the word "place," insert the following: "on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 5 strike out the words "of the."

In line 6 strike out the words "on the pension roll of the United States."

In line 7 strike out the word "to."

In lines 8 and 9 strike out the words "subject to the rules and regulations of the Pension Office."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, there is a mistake in the spelling of the first name of the claimant. Instead of "Maria" it should be "Mira." I move to change the spelling of that name, both in the body of the bill and in the title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE GARRETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7418) granting a increase of pension to George Garrett.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of George Garrett, late corporal, Company B, First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, second sergeant Company D, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, first sergeant Company H, Seventeenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and second lieutenant of Company H, Seventeenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, on the pension roll of the United States, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, were read:

Insert the initial "W." in claimant's name in the title, so as to read "George W. Garrett."

Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute therefor the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Garrett, late of Company B, First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments.

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "twenty," in line 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

I wish to say that I am personally acquainted with the applicant in this case, having known him for twenty years past. His grandfather fought in the Revolutionary war, his father in the war of 1812, and he fought in the war of 1845 and served four years in the civil war. He is now 77 years of age and his wife is 75, and both are entirely dependent. For years past, to my personal knowledge, this claimant has been unable to do a day's work, but the good people of that town in their generosity have come to his relief. I introduced this bill asking for $30, but the committee cut it down to $20. I ask the attention of the House to the report which accompanies this bill, which is in part as follows:

Mr. Garrett is now receiving $12 per month under the Mexican war acts of January 29, 1887, and January 5, 1893. He is now in the neighborhood of 77 years old, and without property or means of support for himself and aged wife, aside from his pension. Medical evidence accompanying the bill shows that claimant's condition is now one of extreme helplessness from paralysis, vertigo, and other causes, and that he should have an attendant at all times. The facts are shown by a petition and numerous affidavits from citizens of Pottsville, Pa., where claimant resides, and also by a personal certificate by the Representative who presented the bill in the House, he having full personal knowledge in the premises.

That is a fact, gentlemen—that he is so old and feeble at this time that he can not attend to himself, and that when he goes about the streets of Pottsville it is necessary that some person attend him. He is liable at any time to be affected with the vertigo, from which he is now suffering, and to my knowledge he has fallen on the public streets of the borough of Pottsville within the past seven or eight months and been carried to his home in expectation of his death. I know the circumstances are such that if the committee will but give this increase of $10 more, making it $30, he can then live and be in more independent circumstances than he has been during the last eight or ten years. I hope, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment will carry.

Mr. TALBERT. What is the reason he could not get this increase?

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. Well, I want to say, my friend, that I did not appear before the committee and make a statement there, as I have before the House.

Mr. TALBERT. I have not the report before me.

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. Of course I submitted what medical evidence we had in order to support the claim for $30 a month.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill similar in character to hundreds which have come before our committee. This man is now drawing a pension under the Mexican pension act of 1893 of $12 a month. This committee have taken into consideration the physical and financial condition of this claimant in the amendment which is reported to the bill, giving the increase which we have given, and it is the maximum amount allowed by the committee in all cases of this kind.

I desire to say for the benefit of this committee, and feel proud in saying it, that these reports reflect the unanimous judgment of that committee; so that they are not the recommendation of a portion of the committee, but are the unanimous recommendation of the committee. I submit that if this Committee of the Whole proposes to take up first one case and then another and raise the amount we will find that we will be in the same position that we were three, four, or six years ago in regard to pension legislation, without any continuity of action or equitable line but such as shall happen to be the mood of the individual. First one will get a high pension, and the next, equally as meritorious, a low one. I trust this committee will conform to the action of the Committee on Pensions, that has given not only this case but all the cases that they have considered fair treatment.

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. I want to say I propose to cast no reflection upon the judgment of the committee; but when I make a statement to this House in relation to the physical and financial condition, circumstances that the applicant is in, I do it with an honest regard of what ought to be truthfully said. I believe that if the committee had just as full a knowledge of the applicant's condition as I possessed they would report the original bill calling for $30.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I will say, for the benefit of the gentleman, that his statement is in the report. The House has had cognizance of the facts ever since the report.

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. That is very true. You have reported the facts as they were submitted to the committee, but I have had some evidence that the committee never had, that of seeing the applicant and noticing his feeble condition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the committee amendment.

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. I call for a division on that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has called for a division. The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. I ask for a division on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The result has been announced, and a vote has been taken on the committee amendment. Does the gentleman still desire a division upon the committee amendment.

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. I call for a division on the committee amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 30.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The question was taken on ordering tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Fourteen gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I hope that question will not be raised.

Mr. BROMWELL. We are going to raise it. I say if you people are interested in this subject, when there are only 40 or 50 members present you should sustain the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Let them take the responsibility on that side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and three gentlemen present—a quorum.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The noes have it, and the committee amendment is rejected. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote?

The CHAIRMAN. Not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROMWELL. Is debate upon this question exhausted at this time, or would it be in order to call the attention of the House to the fact that the original bill calls for $30? They want to know what they are doing.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I raise the point of order that debate is not in order at this present time. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing upon the question of laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation, and therefore debate is not in order.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I give notice that I shall demand a yea and nay vote in the House on the amendment.

DOLLY L. HARRELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2734) granting an increase of pension to Dolly L. Harrell, of Hinds County, Miss.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Dolly L. Harrell, widow of Wells C. Harrell, late sergeant of Company D, First Regiment Mississippi Volunteers (Mexican war), and pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "sixteen" and substitute therefor the word "twelve."

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to the bill just reported. I insist that this widow should have $16 instead of $12, as per amendment. I have great respect for the committee, and while I think they have done what they considered right in the premises under the conditions, I submit this lady is entitled to $16 a month. I ask the Clerk to read the report.

The report (by Mr. CRAWFORD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2734) granting an increase of pension to Dolly L. Harrell, of Hinds County, Miss., beg leave to submit the following report and recommend that said bill do pass with amendments.

The claimant is the widow of Wells C. Harrell, late a sergeant in Company D, First Mississippi Volunteers, who served from June 6, 1846, to June 12, 1847, in the war with Mexico.

Mrs. Harrell, who resides at Jackson, Hinds County, Miss., is now a pensioner at $8 per month under the Mexican war service pension act of January 29, 1887. She married the soldier July 31, 1851, and he died April 9, 1895.

The claimant is now in the neighborhood of 69 years old, and the testimony accompanying the bill shows that she has no property or income aside from her small pension, and that she is dependent upon a crippled son for support. It is further shown that she is so disabled as to be utterly unable to do anything to aid in her own maintenance.

There are many precedents for the granting of an increased rating to the aged and indigent widows of Mexican war veterans, and in view of the facts stated above, your committee recommend the papsage of the bill with the following amendments:

Strike out of the title the words "of Hinds County, Miss."

In line 8 strike out the word "sixteen" and substitute therefor the word "twelve;" so as to fix the rating at $12 per month.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this is the widow of a gallant soldier of the Mexican war, who helped bring to this Government some of the finest possessions we have. This widow is poor, she is old, and has upon her hands an invalid son. The report says that he is the only help she has in the way of support. The truth about it is he is, by reason of his infirmity, a burden upon her. She gets $8 a month and has to pay $4 for house rent, which leaves only $4 to support her and her invalid son. I appeal to gentlemen on this floor from a sense of justice to give this woman the poor pittance of $16 a month in order that she may, in her old age at least, have something upon which to live. The amendment offered by the committee reduces it to $12. I submit, in view of the legislation we have had in behalf of pensions, that it is right that this widow of a gallant Mississippi soldier should have the poor pittance of $16.

Mr. KING. She made a mistake in marrying a private instead of an officer.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Harrell was a sergeant.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that this soldier had a service of about a year, and that this woman did not marry the soldier until after the war, and the committee have taken into consideration her age, her feeble condition, and the fact of her having a crippled son, which may be, as the gentleman says, a detriment or a hindrance to her; and they have given her not the amount under the general law which the widows of soldiers of the late war receive, but the maximum amount allowed the widows of soldiers of the late war who lost their husbands in the service. I believe in that they are doing all they ought to do.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman will excuse my lack of information, but is there a different rate for a sergeant from that of a private?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This man was a sergeant of a company.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. They all go as privates. In granting the pension at $12 a month, the committee believes that they have done all that they ought to do.

The great trouble about individual members of the House in addressing the Committee of the Whole is, they seem to believe that the pension bill which they introduce is the only one that has merit, and about the only one that is to be considered, or that will make any draft upon the Treasury of the United States. If they will come to the committee room and see the hundreds and hundreds that are there asking for an increase of pension, perhaps they will think better of it. I believe the amount reported by this committee is equitable, and I trust the Committee of the Whole will conform their action to that of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up valuable time, but here is a case where, as the law now stands, this widow gets $8. Her case is so serious that she has come to us for relief. This committee seems willing to give her $4 of relief and no more. She is now 69 years of age, has a dependent son, and appeals to us for a little competence. The committee are willing to give her $12, but the gentleman from Mississippi asks that we raise it $4, and give her $16. I hope the sentiment here will support the gentleman from Mississippi and give her $16, if we do anything. Therefore I shall not support the amendment to reduce it to $12.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I did not know until a few moments ago that there was such a claim as this pending, but it so happens that I was personally acquainted with the deceased soldier. He was a sergeant in the company of which my grandfather was a captain, the First Mississippi Rifles, in the Mexican war. He lived quite a long while in my county. I know he was a man of magnificent courage, of estimable habits, and of great self-reliance. I know that he was a man unfortunate in so far as making or keeping money was concerned, and that he died absolutely without anything. I know there was not a man anywhere who ever wore the uniform better than old Major Harrell, as we called him. I want to say that much in his behalf. I do not know that that has anything to do with the legal aspect of the case. On the other hand, from my observations when we are in Committee of the Whole on a pension case, I am not dead certain that the legal aspect has much to do with it. It has generally been considered right to appeal to the House on the ground of the need of the applicant and the merits of the soldier whose widow the applicant claims to be.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If it is right that we should give her $4, then it is right that she should have enough to do some good.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, in this matter of pensions I think the House ought to be just to all the claimants. I do not think it is right that we should come in here and discriminate in favor of some and against others. We have to have some kind of rule, and the Committee on Pensions have various and sundry claims and various kinds of pleas and appeals upon which the applicants ask for increase of pensions. We can not give everybody everything that may be asked for. Now, I can not see any good reason why this claimant should have any more than other claimants who have equal merits. For instance, Col. John A. Fogg, from my district, commanded a regiment in Mexico, and his widow is drawing only $12 a month; and under the rules of the committee of the House and the rules of the Senate committee no more can be allowed. I submit it would not be fair, it would not be just, to allow the widow of a sergeant to receive $16 a month while the widow of a colonel can not get more than $12.

Mr. VANDIVER. Did we not pass a bill here a few moments ago raising the pension of the widow of a deceased colonel to $50 a month?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not know whether you did or not. I have just come into the Hall.

Several MEMBERS. We did.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. And that case was no more meritorious than this.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If that was not a meritorious case, it would not make it right that we should pass this bill.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. That was right, and so is this.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Why should we give the widow of a sergeant $16 and the widow of a colonel $12.

Mr. VANDIVER. Both bills are put on the ground of the need of the widow and the good record of the deceased soldier. Does not the gentleman think that the widow of a private soldier may be as needy as the widow of a colonel?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not speaking of that. I say that the sergeant's widow should not receive any more than the widow of a colonel. This widow to whom I have called attention is 77 years of age; she is sick abed and has nobody to depend upon for support except her two widowed daughters.

Under the rules of the House and Senate committees no more can be allowed this widow than she is now receiving, because when a pension has once been increased by a private act, whether the increase be $1 or $20, no further increase can be granted under the rule; a proposition of further increase would not be considered. This pension was increased from $8 to $12 in the last Congress. The widow was receiving under the general law $8 a month; and a special act increased her pension to $12 a month. Under these circumstances, under the rules of the committees, her claim for a further increase can not be considered.

Mr. NEVILLE. When was the rule of which the gentleman speaks adopted by the House and the Senate?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is a rule of the committees.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. We do not know of any ironclad rules in regard to pensions.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am trying to inform the members of this committee that there is such a rule.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. These cases come in here on their merits, each one standing by itself. If the House does not choose to grant in this case the pension of $16, I am content to take $12.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But I was undertaking to say to the gentleman and to the House that we should try to equalize these pensions and give all deserving cases a fair show. I am willing to vote for $16 a month in this case if the same amount is granted in other cases of widows of Mexican soldiers equally as meritorious.

Mr. NEVILLE. The House is not responsible for any rule of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the House understood the question just voted upon.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The amendment having been adopted, it places the amount back at $16, does it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the committee, fixing the rate at $12, has been agreed to.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. But I offered an amendment to change the amount back to $16. We supposed we were voting upon that question as an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the condition of the question. The bill provided for a pension of $16 a month. The amendment reported by the committee proposed that $16 be changed to $12; and this amendment of the committee has been agreed to.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. The Committee of the Whole did not so understand the matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Members supposed they were voting upon the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. HENRY].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on laying aside the bill as amended with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to reconsider is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Members thought they were voting on the amendment of my colleague.

Mr. RIDGELY. What became of the motion made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HENRY] to amend the amendment of the committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That amendment of my colleague was in order, and the question should have been put upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The way to accomplish the purpose of the gentleman from Mississippi would have been to vote down the committee amendment, which would have left the original bill, proposing a pension of $16, standing.

Mr. RIDGELY. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HENRY] made a motion to amend the committee's amendment by inserting $16.

The CHAIRMAN. That could not be done, because the bill itself provided for a pension of $16, and the amendment of the committee proposed $12.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not proper to entertain the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to reconsider the vote just taken?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why not?

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole, and there can be no motion to reconsider in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the reason that the rule which applies in the House does not apply in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A parliamentary inquiry, if the Chair please.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Suppose it be plainly palpable to the Chair that the House, intending to vote for the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, has really voted for the committee amendment. Now, the parliamentary inquiry is this: Is there no way for the House to get out of that situation?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the proposition as a request for unanimous consent. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the vote may be retaken. Whilst we can not reconsider in Committee of the Whole; yet if there is a misunderstanding, the vote, by unanimous consent, can be taken again.

Mr. POWERS. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken again. It is evident that there was a mistake. I myself voted under a misapprehension.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the vote may be retaken. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Now the question is upon the committee amendments, which will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "sixteen" and insert the word "twelve."

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER demanded a division.

The committee divided: and there were—ayes 20, noes 54.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the remaining committee amendments.

The remaining committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

IDA WIEDERHOLD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2621) granting a pension to Ida Wiederhold.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ida Wiederhold, widow of Eberhard Wiederhold, deceased, member of Company F, Second United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, were read:

In line 6 strike out "deceased."
In line 7 strike out "member" and insert in lieu thereof "late."

Strike out the word "receives," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the word "receiving."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recomendation.

ANNIE M. CHURCHWARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4037) granting a pension to Mrs. Annie M. Churchward, widow of William F. Churchward, late private, Company H, One hundred and fifty-ninth New York Infantry.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Annie M. Churchward, widow of William F. Churchward, late private, Company H, One hundred and fifty-ninth New York Infantry.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 6 strike out the word "Mrs."
In line 8, before the words "New York," insert the word "Regiment;" in the same line, before the word "Infantry," insert the word "Volunteer;" in the same line, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month, and $2 per month additional for the minor child of the soldier until such child shall arrive at the age of 16 years."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Annie M. Churchward."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

EDGAR H. STEVENS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8655) granting an increase of pension to Edgar H. Stevens.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Edgar H. Stevens, late private in Company B, Fifteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he now receives.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 5 strike out the word "in."

In line 6 strike out the word "Volunteers;" and in the same line, after the words "New Hampshire," insert the words "Volunteer Infantry."

In line 7, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate;" in the same line, after the word "he," insert the word "is."

In line 8 strike out the word "receives" and insert in lieu thereof the word "receiving."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SARAH ANN FLETCHER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 950) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Fletcher.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah Ann Fletcher, widow of Archer Fletcher, late of Company C, Seventh Battalion, District of Columbia Volunteer Militia Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARGARETHA LIPPERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3186) granting a pension to Margaretha Lippert.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaretha Lippert, widow of Adam Lippert, late of Company B, Eighth Battalion, District of Columbia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LEVI MOSER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1917) granting an increase of pension to Levi Moser.

WILLIAM H. H. MACDONALD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8801) granting an increase of pension to W. H. H. MacDonald.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. H. MacDonald, late of Company L, Fifteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 6 strike out the word "MacDonald" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Macdonald."

In line 7, before the word "Pennsylvania," insert the word "Regiment;" in the same line, before the word "Cavalry," insert the word "Volunteer."

In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Macdonald."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM H. BROOKINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4422) granting a pension to William H. Brookins.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of William H. Brookins, late of Company B, Seventeenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 6, after the word "Regiment," strike out the word "of."

In the same line, before the word "Cavalry," insert the word "Volunteer."

In line 7, before the word "of," insert the words "at the rate."

In the same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William H. Brookins."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

NATHANIEL L. COLSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9180) granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel L. Colson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nathaniel L. Colson, late of Company D, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HENRIETTA P. COTTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9419) granting a pension to Mrs. H. P. Cotter.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. H. P. Cotter, widow of Capt. John S. Cotter, late of Company K, One hundred and twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the committee, were read:

In line 6 strike out the word "Mrs." and the letter "H." and insert in lieu thereof the word "Henrietta."

In line 6 strike out the word "Captain."

In line 7 strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "captain;" in the same line, before the word "Illinois," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

FERGUSON M. BURTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9163) granting a pension to Ferguson M. Burton.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Ferguson M. Burton, late of Company G, Sixty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and Company C, One hundred and thirty-seventh Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $24 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the committee, were read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 5, the word "limitations" and insert in lieu thereof the word "provisions;" in the same line, after the word "and," strike out the word "provisions" and insert in lieu thereof the word "limitations."

In line 7 strike out the word "Volunteers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Volunteer Infantry."

In line 8 strike out the word "Volunteers," and in the same line, before the word "Infantry," insert the word "Volunteer."

In line 9, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate;" in the same line strike out the words "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

Mr. DE GRAFFENREID. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee by inserting the word "twenty" where they have inserted the word "twelve."

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment would not be in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to hear the gentleman make a statement.

Mr. DE GRAFFENREID. The original bill called for $24, and the amendment of the committee puts it at $12.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman could reach his object by voting down the amendment.

Mr. DE GRAFFENREID. I offer that as an amendment, by leaving it $24 instead of $12, as recommended by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment would not be in order. The same result can be accomplished by voting down the committee amendment.

Mr. GRAFF. I suggest to the gentleman from Texas that he make a request that the propositions of the committee be divided.

The CHAIRMAN. A separate vote can be had on the committee amendments. The question is on the other amendments.

Mr. MADDOX. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDOX. If we vote down the amendment of the committee does not that leave it at $24?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. The question is on the other committee amendments.

The other committee amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10 strike out the words "twenty-four" and insert the word "twelve."

Mr. DE GRAFFENREID. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a statement in connection with this amendment. The party for whose benefit this increase is asked is paralyzed. He is incapable of performing any manual labor whatever. He has no financial means whatever. His testimony before the committee gives substantially that state of facts, supplemented by the personal statement on my part. He lives in the town where I did live, and I know personally the testimony before that committee to be true. He is poor, has a wife and two children, and I would like the House to leave the bill as it was, at $24, and to vote down the amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. How old is he?

Mr. DE GRAFFENREID. Fifty-four years old.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH W. MURPHEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2200) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth W. Murphey.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth W. Murphey, widow of Thomas G. Murphey, late chaplain First Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I see that the committee here has just substituted the Senate report. As I understand, it has been stated here time and again that all House bills are investigated, experts are sent for, and an examination made. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if that is also the case in the cases where they substitute the Senate report, or if they just take the Senate report as it comes to them?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that the Senate has as good an expert as there is in the Bureau; we have one who is as good as any in the Bureau. These gentlemen do not review each other. It would be an idle waste of time. But this report of the Senate has been gone over by a man as good as any in the country, and none more competent than the two gentlemen.

Mr. TALBERT. Then you just substitute the Senate report?

Mr. SULLOWAY. No; we do not substitute the Senate report. We accept it, unless there is some reason to question it.

Mr. TALBERT. I see it is a common thing in the Senate to pass these bills two to the minute.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Well, that is the way to do business. The trouble is that it takes two hours to pass one here, where we are using so much wind,

Mr. TALBERT. I only asked so as to know.

Mr. SULLOWAY. The Senate has method, and we have wind.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman has a good deal of it about him.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES J. HOLLAND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2943) granting a pension to James J. Holland.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James J. Holland, late of Company E, Seventy-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation.

HANNAH R. JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 755) granting a pension to Hannah R. Johnson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hannah R. Johnson, widow of Maj. John Cockrell Johnson, late One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $25 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

EMILY A. LARIMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3125) granting a pension to Emily A. Larimer.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily A. Larimer, former widow of Henry J. Hill, late of Company F, Thirty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LOUISA C. GERMAIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8682) to place upon the pension roll Louisa C. Germain, widow of Charles Germain.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States the name of Louisa C. Germain, as the widow of Charles Germain, late acting master on the U. S. S. Cincinnati, United States Navy, war of rebellion, at the rate of $50 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the committee, were read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louisa C. Germain, widow of Charles Germain, late acting master, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Louisa C. Germain."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

NELLIE A. WEST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2545) granting a pension to Nellie A. West.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nellie A. West, widow of Louis H. West, late of Company B, First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN T. HAYES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1600) granting an increase of pension to John T. Hayes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John T. Hayes, late of Company F, Tenth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOSEPH P. POPE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1787) granting an increase of pension to Joseph P. Pope.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph P. Pope, late captain and commissary of subsistence, United States Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JULIA D. RICHARDSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 681) granting a pension to Julia D. Richardson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Julia D. Richardson, former widow of Chesley Pratt, late of Third Battery Minnesota Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY M. YOUNG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4789) granting a pension to Mary M. Young.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mary M. Young on the pension roll of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations of the laws relating to pensions, and to pay the said Mary M. Young a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the committee, were read:

Strike out all after the word "place," in line 4, and all of lines 5, 6, 7, and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "On the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary M. Young, widow of Jesse B. Young, late of Company B, Sixth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES WILLIAMSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1271) granting a pension to Charles Williamson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles Williamson, late assistant surgeon Twelfth Regiment Kansas State Volunteer Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELEANOR M'DEVITT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 342) granting a pension to Eleanor McDevitt.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eleanor McDevitt, widow of Frank McDevitt, late scout with the Twenty-fifth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ROXIE B. SALTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7230) granting a pension to Roxie B. Salter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Salter, late a first lieutenant in Company K, Eighth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, upon the pension roll, and pay her a pension of $17 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, and agreed to, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "place," in line 4, and all in lines 5, 6, 7, and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Roxie B. Salter, widow of John I. Salter, late first lieutenant Company K, Eighth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Roxie B. Salter."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

AMOS VAN NAUSDLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5978) for the relief of Amos Van Nausdle.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Amos Van Nausdle, late of Company F, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, upon the pension roll, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now drawing.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "place," in line 4, and all in lines 5, 6, 7, and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amos Van Nausdle, late of Company F, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Amos Van Nausdle."

Mr. TALBERT. I ask that the report in this case be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following report:

This bill proposes to increase the pension of Amos Van Nausdle from $10 to $30 per month.

This soldier, now 74 years of age, served as a private in Company F, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, from May 2, 1864, to August 31, 1864, and the medical records of the War Department show that he was treated from June 12 to August 4, 1864, for flux.

He applied for pension March 8, 1878, under the general law, on account of chronic diarrhea and rupture of left side, and was pensioned in 1884 at $4 per month from the date of discharge for chronic diarrhea, and this pension was increased to $6 per month from March 13, 1889, disease of rectum having been accepted as a result of the pensioned cause, and again increased to $10 per month from December 17, 1890. The claim for rupture was rejected September 8, 1885, upon the ground of no record in the War Department of any treatment for such rupture, and no other satisfactory evidence having been filed showing that the hernia originated in the service.

In an affidavit filed in September, 1882, the soldier alleged that the rupture was caused by the hospital steward trying to carry him from the office to his bunk, as he was unable to walk; in another affidavit, filed in 1883, the soldier stated that he did not know that he was ruptured and did not discover it until after he was sent home.

In a subsequent affidavit he stated that the assistant surgeon examined him in July, 1864, while in service, and told him that he was ruptured, and in an affidavit filed in July, 1897, he stated that while in hospital he was carried from one room to another by the hospital steward, and that in the transfer he was hurt; that a few days thereafter he was examined by the surgeon, who informed him that he was ruptured.

The evidence filed in the case as to the origin of the alleged hernia is altogether based upon the soldier's statements to the witnesses and not upon personal knowledge, except that the assistant surgeon of the soldier's regiment testified that he saw the alleged hernia in the service, but had no knowledge as to its origin.

The adverse action of the Pension Bureau as to this disability was affirmed by Assistant Secretary Davis under date of November 11, 1899.

Rupture of the left side was shown to exist in the first examination, on November 1, 1882, and in all subsequent examinations, and the last medical examination in the case, had December 17, 1890, rated him $10 for the pensioned disabilities—$4 for rheumatism and $6 for rupture. The rupture is shown to protrude through the external ring, and under the present schedule ratings would entitle him to $10 per month.

The soldier having been accepted into the service as sound after passing a medical examination, and existence of the rupture in the service being shown by the testimony of the regimental surgeon, it should be presumed that such rupture did originate in the service and line of duty, as alleged, and hence your committee report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass after the same shall have been amended as follows:

Strike out all after the word "place," in line 4, and all in lines 5, 6, 7, and 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amos Van Nausdle, late of Company F, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Amos Van Nausdle."

Mr. TALBERT (before the reading of the report was concluded). Mr. Chairman, I do not ask for the further reading of the report. I notice that the affidavits cited in this report contradict each other. I should like to hear some statement in regard to this matter from the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. There is in this case an affidavit stating that the soldier at the time he was ruptured did not know it and did not discover it until after he was sent home. The soldier, however, has testified as to the time when he was injured and the circumstances from which the injury occurred. I suggest that a great many men suffering from this peculiar injury do not at first know whether the injury is a rupture or some other lesion.

This man is 74 years of age and has a good record as a soldier.

Mr. TALBERT. All right.

The question being taken on the amendments reported by the committee, they were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably.

CAROLINE B. BRADFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2880) granting an increase of pension to Caroline B. Bradford.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to place upon the pension roll, at $30 per month, under the regulations of the Pension Office and laws, the name of Harriet L. Hughes, widow of the late Maj. Chester K. Hughes, late of Company I, One hundred and forty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harriet L. Hughes, widow of Chester K. Hughes, late major, One hundred and forty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Harriet L. Hughes."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHILL W. HAZZARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8926) granting a pension to Chill W. Hazzard.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Chill W. Hazzard, late captain of Company I, Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 7, after the word "Reserves," insert the words "Volunteer Infantry."

In line 8, strike out the words "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twenty-four;" in the same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Chill W. Hazzard."

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by making it "fifty" in place of "twenty-four."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to amend the committee amendment and offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Mr. ATWATER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know the reason for this proposed increase.

Mr. MAHON. This is not my bill. I make this motion at the request of all the officers of the Department of the Grand Army in the State of Pennsylvania.

Chill W. Hazzard was the commander of that department some years ago. Of course that establishes his reputation as a good soldier. He enlisted in the Twelfth Pennsylvania Reserves in 1862, and served until 1864. At the battle of Fredericksburg he was shot in the head and knocked into a trench. A horse jumped upon him, producing double hernia. He never applied for a pension until 1892, and then he applied under the act of 1890.

On July 21, 1899, last year, this soldier became paralyzed and he is now utterly helpless. He requires the attendance of two people nearly all the time day and night. He is a poor man, and I do not think will live out the year. He is a man that served over three years in the war, was wounded badly, and I ask now for this increase to $50 a month. It is indorsed by all the officers of the encampment.

I know him personally, and certainly we have given higher pensions to people in far better circumstances than this soldier is, to whom I ask that we give $50. I want to add that he is in a great deal worse condition than he was when this bill was reported, and most probably will not outlive this year. Therefore we ask that he be given $50 a month, to alleviate his poverty for the few months that are left to him to live on this earth. I think the chairman of the committee will not oppose this amendment, because he now knows the facts.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania states a much stronger case than appeared in evidence before this committee. He says this gentleman is now paralyzed, helpless, and requires the constant attention of others. If this was due to service origin he would be entitled to $72 a month. I am not here to oppose this amendment. I do not believe the members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions would have reported it at the figure reported had it had that evidence which has now been submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand two affidavits by reputable citizens of Allegheny County showing his condition, which I will ask permission to insert in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The affidavits are as follows:

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, County of Washington, ss:

Before me, the undersigned authority, a notary public in and for said State and county, personally appeared T. S. McCurdy, who, upon oath duly administered according to law, deposes and says: I have known Col. Chill W. Hazzard, of Monongahela, Washington County, Pa., for over twenty years. He is entirely helpless by reason of paralysis. He has no real estate, nor has he any investment securities or money at interest. His only property consists of the printing establishment and paper known as the Monongahela Republican. The income value of said property, I have heard Colonel Hazzard say, was barely sufficient to provide a comfortable living for himself and family in a small town. The value of the property under any other management is problematical, but it is quite within reason to assume that it would be much less, because of the fact that his personality had much to do with the value of the publication.

The total value of his property, if dismantled and sold under the hammer, would not exceed $2,000.

T. S. McCURDY.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 31st day of March, A. D. 1900.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I have personal knowledge of the gentleman's helpless condition, and I heartily concur in all the statements made by my colleague [Mr. MAHON]. I hope the amendment he has offered will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the other amendments.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DAVID P. STEWART.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7614) granting an increase of pension to David P. Stewart.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David P. Stewart, late of Company L, Fiftieth New York Engineers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendments, recommended by the committee, were read:

In line 6, after the word "Fiftieth," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 7, before the word "Engineers," insert the word "Volunteer."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOSEPHINE A. HALEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3481) granting a pension to Josephine A. Haley.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Josephine A. Haley, widow of Henry W. Haley, late a private in the war of the rebellion, and who was employed as a scout during said war, and pay her a pension rated at $30 per month.

The following amendment, recommended by the committee, was read:

Strike out all after the word "place," in line 4, and all of lines 5, 6, 7, and 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Josephine A. Haley, widow of Henry W. Haley, late scout, United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HANNAH G. STRONG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1127) to increase the pension of Hannah G. Strong.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension now granted to Hannah G. Strong (certificate No. 1901) as widow of a Mexican-war soldier, William M. Strong, private, Company F, First Mississippi Volunteers, be, and the same is hereby, increased so as to authorize the payment to her of the sum of $25 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, were read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hannah G. Strong, widow of William M. Strong, late of Company F, First Regiment Mississippi Volunteer Infantry, Mexican war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, was read:

In line 7 strike out "twenty-five" and insert "sixteen."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ISAAC PATTERSON.

The next business ov the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 474) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Patterson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isaac Patterson, late of Company C, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

NELLY YOUNG EGBERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 995) granting an increase of pension to Nelly Young Egbert.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nelly Young Egbert, widow of Harry Clay Egbert, late colonel Twenty-second Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, was read:

In line 8 strike out "fifty" and insert "forty."

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment recommended by the Committee on Pensions will be voted down, and the original bill calling for $50 will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

I make this proposition not because I am not entirely faithful to the committee of which I am a member, and which, as the chairman has said, has been unanimous in reporting these cases, but for this reason: We have to-day increased the amount recommended by the committee in the Stotsenburg case from $40 to $50. There are two analogous cases on this Calendar—the case of Mrs. Egbert, now under consideration, and the case of Mrs. Haskell. In both these cases the committee has reported in favor of a pension of $40, although each of these two widows is just as much entitled to a pension of $50 as is the widow of Colonel Stotsenburg.

In regard to the Egbert case, I wish to say that Colonel Egbert made a gallant record as a soldier in the civil war. At the breaking out of the Spanish war he went to Cuba and was shot in two places. By reason of the injuries which he suffered he was entitled to retire, and had prepared a request for retirement, when his wife said to him: "Colonel, you surely will not retire in the face of the fact that your services may be needed in the Philippines?" He then tore up his application for retirement, returned to the service, and in almost the first engagement in the Philippines in which he took part he was shot to death.

In the case of the widow of Colonel Haskell—a case which will shortly follow the present one on the Calendar—the circumstances were these: Colonel Haskell, who was also a gallant soldier of the civil war, was shot and badly wounded in Cuba. He came home suffering from the effects of his wound. His regiment came back to Columbus; he went out to meet them, and in the excitement of the reunion with his old comrades his wounds started afresh, and he died as the result.

Now, if the widow of Colonel Stotsenburg is entitled to $50, surely the widow of Colonel Egbert and the widow of Colonel Haskell are equally entitled to $50. I therefore ask the committee to vote down in this case the amendment reported by the committee, and vote for a pension of $50 as originally provided in the bill.

Mr. BENTON. I did not quite understand the gentleman's statement. What amount of pension does the committee report?

Mr. BROMWELL. The original bill was for $50; the committee has amended it so as to make the pension $40. Under ordinary circumstances I, as a member of the committee, would stand by its action and favor the amendment for $40; but in view of the fact that the House this afternoon overrode the action of the committee and increased the pension of the widow of Colonel Stotsenburg from $40 to $50, I think that, in order to be consistent, we ought to take the same action in the cases of Colonel Egbert's widow and Colonel Haskell's widow.

Mr. BENTON. All right.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] will not be carried out by this Committee of the Whole. It would be more consistent if the House, when we get out of Committee of the Whole, should reverse the action of the Committee of the Whole upon the Stotsenburg bill. Since the action on that bill the Committee of the Whole has passed three bills equally meritorious—cases in which the widows deserved just as much at our hands as the widows of Colonel Stotsenburg and General Egbert. Take the cases of the widows of Lieutenant-Commander Elmer and Colonel Van Horn. These two cases appeal to us just as strongly as the case of Colonel Stotsenburg's widow. We are liable to involve ourselves in these inconsistencies when bills of this nature are taken out of their regular order and advanced upon the plea of some individual member, or some relative of the beneficiary, or some one coming from the same section of the country. I hope the action of the Committee of the Whole will be consistent and that when we get into the House we shall reverse the action of the Committee of the Whole in the Stotsenburg case, in order that our action may be consistent along the whole line.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Pension Committee which has reported these cases has adopted some rule limiting the amount of pensions in cases of this kind to $40.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But although such is the rule of the committee, the House to-day in several cases of pension claims similar to this has reversed the action of the committee and voted in favor of granting a pension of $50.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. In only one case.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And now the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL], saying that the present case is similar to the one already acted upon, asks us, as I understand, to be consistent—to disagree with the committee in regard to the amendment here reported and pass the bill as originally introduced.

Mr. BROMWELL. I hope the gentleman will not misunderstand my position. I think the House made a mistake in voting to increase the pension in the Stotsenburg case beyond the amount proposed by the committee, but I say that in order to be fair and consistent, in order that we may justify ourselves before the country and before the widows of these other two gallant officers, we should grant to the widows of Colonel Egbert and Colonel Haskell $50.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. We both agree that they should all have the same amount.

Mr. BROMWELL. And I want to say, gentlemen, that if the question is raised in the House, I shall vote to sustain the committee, and vote for $40 a month for the widow of Colonel Stotsenburg; and if the action of the committee is sustained, and the House votes to give his widow $40 a month, then I shall vote for $40 a month for Mrs. Haskell and $40 a month for Mrs. Egbert; but if General Stotsenburg's widow gets $50 a month by the action of the House, then I shall vote for $50 a month pension to each of these other widows.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] to say that he desired to have the committee amendment voted down here, so that this widow will receive the amount named in the bill as originally introduced, $50, so that the action of the House, in view of what it did in the former case, will be consistent.

Mr. BROMWELL. That is my statement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And in that position I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I believe debate is exhausted.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, what bill are we considering?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill (S. 95) granting an increase of pension to Nelly Young Egbert.

Mr. SHATTUC. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BROMWELL demanded a division.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I do not think anybody knows what the question is. I am sure I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 strike out "fifty" and insert "forty."

So that it will read:

Forty dollars per month.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If we vote "aye" upon that motion, is that a vote to retain the original proposition, at $50?

The CHAIRMAN. A vote "aye" would be a vote to adopt the amendment, which is to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty." A division has been demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 37.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

NANCY E. NEELY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 517) granting a pension to Nancy E. Neely.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy E. Neely, widow of Alexander Neely, deceased, who was a soldier in Captain Yoacum's company, Tennessee Volunteers, called out for the protection of the Sabine frontier in 1836, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

RIDA B. HASKELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1804) granting an increase of pension to Rida B. Haskell.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rida B. Haskell, widow of Joseph T. Haskell, late brigadier-general, United States Volunteers, and lieutenant-colonel Seventeenth United States Infantry, war with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, was read:

In line 9 strike out "fifty" and insert "forty."

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, this is another of the two cases to which I referred a moment ago. I therefore hope that the House will vote down the committee amendment of $40 and recommend the bill at $50, as it was originally drawn.

Mr. NEVILLE. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to make a suggestion or two. A fight is made here on the ground that the committee have established a rule fixing $40 in this class of cases, and they say that this House ought not to vote that rule down. I want to call the attention of members to the fact that the Senate committee have established a rule at $50, and that there must be a settlement, either in conference or elsewhere, or else we must vote down some of these committee amendments. Otherwise there will be no agreement between the two Houses.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I ask my friends in this House to vote down this amendment. I make that request in good faith, and I ask them not only to vote the amendment down here in committee, but also to sustain that action when we get into the House, because I believe that action to be right. I know that this lady is entitled to $50 a month.

Her husband was captain in the Twenty-third Infantry on July 28, 1866. He was a major in 1892, and a lieutenant-colonel in 1896, and he was a brigadier-general September 7, 1898. He was in command of his regiment, the Seventeenth United States Infantry, during the operations in Cuba, and he died from a wound received at El Caney, the date of his death being September 16, 1898.

He was the only brigadier-general who lost his life in Cuba, and I ask my friends in this House, on this bare statement, if they do not care to hear the record of this soldier's career read further, to vote down the committee amendments and to sustain that action in the House, because I believe it to be right. This lady is a widow who has no means of support except this pension. I ask my friends to vote for it here in the committee and to vote for it in the House.

The question being taken on the committee amendment, it was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES C. CARLTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2505) granting an increase of pension to James C. Carlton.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James C. Carlton, late of Company F, Fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, was read:

Strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in this case I hope the committee amendment will not prevail. This applicant is an old Mexican soldier, 72 years old. He has but one arm. In the Fifty-fifth Congress the Senate passed a bill for him at $30 a month, and at this session they have passed it again at $30 a month. To my personal knowledge the old man is worn out physically. He is without a home, and he has depending upon him an invalid daughter about 40 years of age. She is afflicted with nervous troubles, and they have no means of support except this pension. Now, it does seem to me that if this committee are willing to vote $50 to a widow, they should certainly be willing to vote $30 to an old soldier, 72 years old, who has but one arm, who is rheumatic and worn out, who has an afflicted daughter dependent upon him.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Was the injury of which the gentleman speaks received in the service?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. That injury was not; no, sir. This is a Senate bill, which was passed at $30; and if it does not pass the House, he will not get anything.

The committee amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry private pension bills and bills removing charges of desertion, and that the committee had directed him to report the same back, some with and some without amendments, and recommending the passage of the same.

MARY L. STOTSENBURG.

The first business to be reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4367) granting a pension to Mary C. Stotsenburg, with amendments.

The question was taken on the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Division!

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. What is the vote upon?

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole. Perhaps the Clerk had better report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "one hundred" and insert "fifty;" so as to read "$50 per month."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill once more.

The title of the bill was again reported.

Mr. BROMWELL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The original bill called for a hundred dollars, and the amendment is one reducing that amount to fifty?

The SPEAKER. That is the situation, the Chair understands.

Mr. BROMWELL. And the vote is on the amendment reducing from $100 to $50.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a division. On the vive voce vote the amendment was carried.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 3.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various bills were passed was laid on the table.

STIPULATIONS OF ARTICLE VII OF THE TREATY BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND SPAIN.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 2799 be made a special order for to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. STEELE. Let us know what the bill is, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is an act to carry into effect the stipulations of Article VII of the treaty between the United States and Spain, concluded on the 10th of December, 1898. It was recommended in the President's message to provide for the appointment of a commission.

Mr. PAYNE. To adjudicate the claims of citizens.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think there will be no objection if gentlemen will permit us to offer an amendment, an amendment to which I think there will be no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose this is to be heard in the House as in Committee of the Whole. I shall want to offer an amendment myself.

The SPEAKER. If it is made a special order it will be considered in the House.

Mr. PAYNE. As in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The bill ought to be read and be open to amendment as it is read. We can have an agreement that it shall be read in the House and open to amendment, each section as it is read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the bill can be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then, as I understand, we shall be permitted to offer amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I think I caught what this bill is, that it is to appoint a commission to adjust and to adjudicate the claims arising out of the war with Spain.

Mr. PAYNE. It is to adjudicate the damages upon claims of American citizens against Spain, which, under the treaty, the United States agreed to pay and adjudicate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is provided for in one of the articles of the treaty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

STATUE OF GEN. ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Library, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the Grand Army of the Republic of the statue of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, to be erected in the Capitol, be made the special order for Saturday, May 19, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and accordingly the special order is made.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SALMON for four days on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes), the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

RECLAMATION OF ARID LANDS.

Mr. CARTER. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate a statement of the operations of the United States Geological Survey relating to the following items:

The investigations being made of the water resources of the United States, particularly of the arid regions.

The amount of money which has been or will be expended for this purpose in the year ending June 30, 1900.

The character of the information obtained.

What steps are being taken, or should be, to make specific statements of the possibility and cost of the reclamation of certain tracts, mapping the sources of water, location of canals and reservoirs, giving cost of these, location, and extent of lands to be reclaimed?

What specific localities are under consideration for such surveys?

What amount of money will be required for the year ending June 30, 1901, to carry on the investigations of lands reclaimable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator object to having it go over? Does he care particularly to have it acted on to-day?

Mr. CARTER. I do not specially care, if the Senator desires that it shall go over.

Mr. SPOONER. I do, not for the purpose of antagonizing it, but I think I might like to amend it, to enlarge it a little.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator rise to morning business?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think there is a resolution that comes over from yesterday, and I should like to have it disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to lay it before the Senate after the conclusion of morning business. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PETTIGREW, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate whether General Torres, one of the officers of the Philippine army, came to General Otis with a flag of truce on February 5, 1899, the day after the fighting commenced between our forces and those of the Filipinos, and stated to General Otis that General Aguinaldo declared that fighting had been begun accidentally and was not authorized by him, and that Aguinaldo wished to have it stopped, and that to bring about a conclusion of hostilities he proposed the establishment of a neutral zone between the two armies of a width that would be agreeable to General Otis, so that during the peace negotiations there might be no further danger of conflict between the two armies, and whether General Otis replied that fighting having once begun must go on to the grim end. Was General Otis directed by the Secretary of War to make such an answer? Did General Otis telegraph the Secretary of War on February 9, 1899, as follows: "Aguinaldo now applies for a cessation of hostilities and conference. Have declined to answer?" And did General Otis afterwards reply? Was he directed by the Secretary of War to reply, and what answer, if any, did he or the Secretary of War make to the application to cease fighting?

The President is also requested to inform the Senate whether the flag of the Philippine republic was ever saluted by Admiral Dewey or any of the vessels of his fleet at any time since May 1, 1898. Did Admiral Dewey, at the request of Aguinaldo or any officer under him, send the vessels Concord and Raleigh to Subig Bay to assist Aguinaldo's forces in the capture of the Spanish garrison at that place? Did said vessels assist in the capture of the Spanish garrison, and after the surrender did they turn the prisoners thus taken over to the Philippine forces?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

The resolution was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House on the agricultural appropriation bill with a view to the appointment of conferees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10338) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. BATE were appointed.

SOLDIERS' HOME AT HOT SPRINGS, S. DAK.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2928.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays the Calendar under Rule VIII before the Senate. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read to the Senate in full for its information.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will give way for a moment, I wish to move to have some additional copies printed——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the bill laid before the Senate first. It will take only a moment anyway. It is a short bill, and a similar bill has passed the Senate two or three times, or four times, I believe.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 2928) for the establishment, control, operation, and maintenance of the Northern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Hot Springs, in the State of South Dakota; and the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to its consideration as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $150,000 for the erection of the Northern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Hot Springs, in the State of South Dakota, which shall be erected by and under the direction of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, which Branch Home, when in a condition to receive members, shall be subject to such rules, regulations, and restrictions as shall be provided by the Board of Managers. But the Branch Home shall be erected on land donated to the United States by the people of Hot Springs, S. Dak., and accompanied with a deed of perpetual lease to one or more of the medical or hot springs for the use of the above-named Home, the location and area of the land and springs of hot water to be selected by the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers or such persons as they may appoint to make the selection of location and hot springs, and that exclusive jurisdiction shall be vested in the Board of Managers over the premises occupied by the Home as over other realty held by the Board until further enactment by the Congress of the United States.

It further proposes to appropriate $20,000, to be used for the transportation to and from the Home of such patients as may be ordered to said Home by the Board of Managers and for equipping and maintaining the Home, subject to the aforesaid rules and regulations of the Board of Managers. But any member of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers who shall be certified to the Home by the medical and legal authorities of the Board of Managers shall be admitted and treated thereat until discharged therefrom or returned to some other Branch of the National Home by order of the Board of Managers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to ask that a thousand additional copies of the supplemental report on the examination of the public schools of the District of Columbia be printed for the use of the Senate. There is a great demand for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that 1,000 additional copies of the report on the District of Columbia school examinations, a supplemental report, be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Those reports ought to be printed, and printed in an accessible form. We have had the first report printed, and it has gone to the document room, and we had the last part printed, and it went, I believe, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. STEWART. No; let it be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let them both be printed together as one document. We have applications for it, and I have to go and hunt at one place for one and at another place for the other.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the whole report printed together for the use of the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to know the character of the report.

Mr. SPOONER. What was the investigation?

Mr. STEWART. A school investigation. I only ask for the printing of the supplemental report, which is on the examinations. There appears to be a great demand for it, and the clerk of our committee says he has begged all the copies he can, and he can not answer the letters.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator if the examination by the committee has been completed?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I hope the report will be printed as a document, so that we may see what it is.

Mr. COCKRELL. It ought all to be printed together, so that we can have the whole of it.

Mr. STEWART. Then I move that 1,000 copies of the report and the supplement be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope I can have the attention of the Senator from Nevada long enough to have him answer my question. What is the character of this report?

Mr. STEWART. It would take considerable time to state the character of the report. It is in favor of establishing a board of education having a responsible head. The report shows that there is no responsible head.

Mr. ALLEN. Is it the report of an investigation recently made?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; this is a just a supplemental report.

Mr. ALLEN. By whom was the investigation made?

Mr. STEWART. By the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLEN. Of the Senate?

Mr. STEWART. Of the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I am very thankful to the Senator for the information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Nevada repeat his exact request?

Mr. STEWART. I move that a thousand additional copies of the report and the supplement be printed together for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RAINY LAKE RIVER DAM.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7945) to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across Rainy Lake River."

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURG. JOHN F. BRANSFORD.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2055) for the promotion and retirement of P. A. Surg. John F. Bransford, of the United States Navy.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEUT. WILLIAM T. GODWIN.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 395) to authorize the President to revoke the order dismissing William T. Godwin, late first lieutenant, Tenth Infantry, United States Army, and to place the said William T. Godwin on the retired list with the rank of first lieutenant.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF DARIUS B. RANDALL.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 253) to provide for the payment of the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements relinquished to the United States for the use of the Nez Perce Indians.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out before the word "dollars," in line 4, "three thousand one hundred and sixty-one," and insert in lieu thereof "two thousand four hundred;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted etc., That the sum of $2,400 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements situated on the Nez Perce Indian Reservation relinquished by said deceased to the United States for the use of the Nez Perce tribe of Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEONARD WILSON.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3339) for the relief of Leonard Wilson.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, after the word "appropriated," in line 5, to strike out "seven hundred dollars" and insert "six hundred and forty-two dollars and sixty-eight cents," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Leonard Wilson, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $642.68, for services rendered to the United States, in excess of the ordinary number of working hours, in Cuba; at Camp Wikoff, Montauk Point, Long Island, and at Huntsville, Ala., while serving in a civil capacity under the War Department with Maj. Gen. Joseph Wheeler, United States Volunteers, during the war with Spain.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONGRESS HEIGHTS ENGINE HOUSE.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3918) providing for the erection of engine house and the purchase of a chemical engine at Congress Heights, D. C.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, in line 3, after the word "of," to strike out "four" and insert "twenty;" in the same line, after the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred," and at the end of the bill to add the following proviso:

Provided, That a suitable parcel of ground, satisfactory to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, be donated to the said District before such sum shall be available.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of a suitable house and for the purchase of a chemical engine: Provided, That a suitable parcel of ground, satisfactory to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, be donated to the said District before such sum shall be available.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was rejected.

WILLIAM LEECH.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1336) for the relief of William Leech.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out, before the word "thousand," in line 4, the word "ten" and insert the word "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Before the bill is put on its passage I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The Secretary read the bill as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to William Leech the sum of $5,000 as compensation for injuries received by the said Leech in falling in the elevator shaft of the Treasury building on the 29th day of March, 1893; and an amount sufficient to pay same is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case. I should like to understand the facts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. MASON February 7, 1900, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1336) for the relief of William Leech, make the following report:

Mr. Leech was an elevator conductor at the United States Treasury building on the morning of March 29, 1893, and had been such prior to that date. His affidavit sets out that he approached the elevator door in the dark, at a few minutes before 8 o'clock a. m., on March 29, 1893, and found it open, as it was usual for it to be at that time, and stepped, as he supposed, into the elevator, but same having been removed, he fell to the bottom of the shaft and injured his back, broke his leg, and received internal injuries.

He states that it was his practice to step into the elevator and turn on the electric light in the elevator, and that no one had any right to interfere with or move the elevator during the morning prior to or at that time (8 o'clock) except himself; that the removal of the elevator was positively against the rules of the Department, and that he had no reason for presuming it had been removed; that he was not late on that morning, and the gas in the hall in front of the elevator was not lighted; that it was not his duty to light the gas in the hall, and that the reason it was not lighted was because the pipe was stopped up with dirt, which fact had been reported, and it was afterwards repaired, and the electric light was also put in in the hall in front of the elevator afterwards.

Your committee, therefore, taking into consideration the circumstances connected with the accident as set forth in Mr. Leech's affidavit, recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

In line 4 strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the committee whether there is any evidence as to the question of permanent injuries? The report, as I understood it, does not give any information upon that subject. That is a very important element.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I have just heard the report. It seems to me that when a claim is made upon the Government for injuries by reason of the negligence of its employees there should be some other proof added to the affidavit of the claimant himself. It seems to be there unsupported in respect of the character of the injuries and the ordinary care exercised by the claimant who was injured. I suggest that the bill should go over or be recommitted.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, I do not know how this bill came before the Senate or who called it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] asked for its present consideration.

Mr. ALLEN. I will state the evidence before the committee, as I recollect it. I have seen this applicant and he is certainly disabled for life. His spinal column is injured and he never can be cured. He will be a cripple as long as he lives.

The evidence before the committee, what there was of it, showed clearly a state of facts which would make a private individual or a private corporation liable for negligence. It showed due caution on the part of this man, ordinary caution, and that he exercised ordinary prudence. It showed neglect, if not something worse, upon the part of others in tampering with the elevator.

This claimant is a man of respectable character, a man whose word I would take for almost anything, although he is a comparative stranger to me. He has a good man's face and a good man's ways. I have known him around here for some time.

Of course I do not agree with the Senator from Maryland that it is necessary to have corroborative proof in a civil case. There are criminal cases where you are required to have corroborative proof, but I have never yet known of a civil case, unless it arose upon some statute, where it was necessary to have corroborative proof; and if this evidence were submitted to a jury to form its own conclusion there would be a verdict for the amount of damages the man sustained. The facts were laid before the committee, and the report of the committee was unanimous upon them.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Does not the Senator think there should be produced evidence from medical sources to show the extent and probable duration of the injury, and whether the injury was temporary or permanent—I am sure he does—and also whether there ought not to be produced some of the accessible evidence in respect of the conduct of that elevator, the position of the doors, etc.? One man's statement in respect even of his own claim is of very great weight, and it seems to me if the elevator shaft were not lighted, and if the other circumstances were as there stated, there is accessible some proof, and some of it, I think, ought to have been produced.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, suppose the facts stated in this report were alleged in a declaration and undenied, would not the plaintiff be entitled to recover?

Mr. MCCOMAS. Undoubtedly, in the absence of opposing proof; but it seems to me, with such a paucity of statement, there ought to be something more than an ex parte affidavit to justify the Senate in voting to give $5,000 for a personal injury on an allegation that the Government has been negligent.

Mr. ALLEN. I will state to the Senator, if he will permit me right there, that I think this is a very meritorious bill.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I do not mean to say it is not.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand the claimant in this case is a man of high character.

Mr. MCCOMAS. What is the evidence of the permanent character of the injury?

Mr. ALLEN. The fact is, Mr. President, that that man's spine is permanently injured, and has been for years; and he has been seen daily going about on crutches. A man is not walking on crutches for three or four years unless he is compelled to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The value of this case is its value as a precedent. There have been many of these cases presented to the Committee on Claims, and the committee have generally been very careful only to report such cases as have been properly made out. It may be that the facts in this case would warrant the appropriation asked, but it seems to me the defect in this case is that the facts do not appear as a matter of record. This case may be cited as a precedent for similar appropriations in cases that come hereafter, and yet the facts which make it a good case do not appear in the record and are personally known only to the members of the committee. For that reason I think the case ought to be recommitted, so that the committee may report what are the facts. The Senator from Nebraska says he is satisfied with the facts, but those facts ought to be on the record of the Senate, so that other Senators may see that the reason why the appropriation was made was because the man was injured by the contributory negligence of other employees of the Government and that he has been permanently injured.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to be permitted to suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that I think the liability of the Government is established by the undisputed facts in the case.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I called this bill up because the beneficiary is a resident of my State; I know him and know that he is seriously crippled by that accident. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] who reported the bill is not here to-day, and so I ask that the matter may go over until that Senator is here.

Mr. CHANDLER. I would ask the Senator if there is any objection to recommitting the bill? There ought to be some evidence besides the sufferer's own affidavit as to the extent of his injuries and as to the negligence of the Government. As the bill stands with that report it will not pass the Senate, I am quite sure. If the bill can be recommitted and proper proof be furnished, demonstrating by the evidence of physicians the injuries sustained, and the evidence of other witnesses as to negligence, it might pass.

Mr. BURROWS. I will say to the Senator that I know such evidence exists and is before the committee. I have not, however, any objection to the bill being recommitted for the purpose of the committee making a fuller report.

Mr. CHANDLER. I make that motion.

Mr. CULLOM. I want to say a word before the matter passes from the attention of the Senate.

I have known this gentleman for a good many years, and I know him to be a sober, upright, and industrious man. I am satisfied that the injuries he received in falling down that elevator shaft will result in permanent disability. The man is scarcely able to go about, and I fear he will never be much better. I do not object to further testimony with reference to how it came about that the elevator car was not in the proper place and all that, but it seems to me this is a case in which there ought to be prompt action taken and relief given.

Mr. CHANDLER. The claimant says it was his own elevator and he was bound to take care of it. He went there to get into it, but it had been moved by somebody, and he fell down the shaft. There certainly should be medical evidence as to the extent of the injury.

Mr. PENROSE. I rise to make an inquiry. I have no doubt whatever that this is an extremely meritorious measure; it also, however, strikes me most forcibly as being an unprecedented attempt to take money from the Treasury. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan, or any other Senator present, whether the proper method would not be to authorize this claim to be referred to the courts of the District of Columbia, so that the merits of the controversy may be tried and the Government of the United States protected, if it has any defense to make to this claim, by the proper law officers of those courts?

Mr. BURROWS. The motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to recommit the bill is perfectly agreeable to me. I hope that will be done, and that will end the matter for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PENROSE. I second the motion.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I suppose the Senate is a law unto itself. I have seen enough of it to know that that is true. This case is similar to other cases which have been acted upon by the Senate. While I can not mention the names, I can call to mind three or four cases of this kind where we have passed bills making appropriations for persons injured around this Capitol and around other public buildings. If this bill is recommitted to the Committee on Claims, it will not come back to the Senate at this session. It can not come back, as the Calendar of the Claims Committee is crowded beyond comparison. So this bill will simply have to pass over until the next session of Congress while this corroborative evidence is being gathered up.

I have not the slightest interest in this man, and, so far as I am individually concerned, it is a matter of absolute indifference to me, outside of the mere humanitarian view, whether he receives a cent or not; but I want to dissent as strongly and as forcibly as I can from the strange doctrine that the undisputed evidence of a witness of good character must be corroborated in order to entitle him to recover. There is no law book from Starkie, which is a legal classic, down through all the American and English works upon evidence to the present moment—and they are very numerous, as you and I, Mr. President [the President pro tempore in the chair], very well know—in which a rule of that kind is recognized.

Here we propose to ignore the ordinary rules of evidence which control the proceedings of judicial tribunals—we propose to set them aside and compel a man whose evidence and whose character are unimpeached and unimpeachable, so far as this Senate knows, and who is a living evidence of lifelong pain and misery in consequence of this injury, to go back to this committee and furnish corroborative evidence of these facts, which he may or may not be able to corroborate, before he can receive this pittance to which he is entitled.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question, if he will permit me.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator who represented the Government when this claim was awarded and the amount of damages defined?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Senate of the United States represents the Government, and the House of Representatives will represent it when the bill goes there, and so the Committees on Claims of the respective Houses represent it. They will represent equally the interests of the Government and the interests of the applicant; and I presume the Senator will admit that, at least in the House of Representatives, there are gentlemen capable of caring for the Government's interests.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator whether any witnesses were summoned before the committee and what was the character and extent of the investigation made into this matter?

Mr. ALLEN. I have never known of witnesses to be examined before the Committee on Claims. The evidence is usually presented in the form of affidavits and statements from reliable sources.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw that motion, because, if adopted, it will amount to a practical denial of justice.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, it will not, let me say to the Senator. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] who is not now present has made a report, and all he states in that report is that the claimant in his affidavit states so and so. On that mere unsupported statement in the report the bill never can pass Congress.

The Senator from Michigan tells me that he believes there is medical testimony and other testimony before the committee, and he is perfectly willing to have the bill recommitted to have those facts stated in the report. Now, under those circumstances, why should the Senator from Nebraska object to the recommittal?

Mr. ALLEN. I object only because it is like the practice of setting aside a verdict in favor of an injured claimant until he has time to die.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will not say that. He says this man has got his spine injured for life, and I am afraid it is so; but that fact is not proved because he says so, nor because the Senator from Nebraska has seen the man going about this Capitol upon crutches. One of the things to be guarded against in tracing cases of this kind is the simulation of injury. A disability of the kind alleged should be proved by medical testimony.

Mr. ALLEN. I dare say there is not a man living who could simulate an injury in the presence of my friend from New Hampshire, although he is not a physician.

Mr. CHANDLER. If I saw the Senator from Nebraska on crutches, I would not infer that his backbone had been injured for life.

Mr. ALLEN. There are certain physical facts which are open to the common knowledge of the human race. If I see a scar upon a man, I know as well as if I were a physician that it is a scar. I do not have to call in a physician to tell me that is a scar, nor do I have to call in a physician to tell me whether it was made by a sharp instrument or by a blunt instrument. There is the indisputable evidence on the face of the individual. If there were internal injuries claimed as resulting from a wound, then it might be necessary to call in a physician or a surgeon to make the proper examination and to take his evidence as to the character and nature of the injuries, and whether they were or were not permanent.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. ALLEN. I will.

Mr. BACON. I ask the Senator whether there is any evidence as to whether this unfortunate man has received anything from the Government in the way of compensation or in the way of paying for medical bills, or anything of that kind?

Mr. ALLEN. I will simply say that my recollection of the facts in this case is necessarily general, because we have a great many of these claims; but my recollection is that he never had any compensation in any respect; that he was entirely without compensation.

Mr. BACON. I asked the question not for the purpose of taking issue with the Senator, but for the purpose of showing that it was important that there should be testimony upon that point, that it may appear that the Government at the time of this injury, without reference to the question of liability, had the man sent to a hospital, paid his expenses, and everything of that kind, all of which ought to be taken into consideration.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no recollection of it, but I have no doubt the Government did send him to a hospital.

Mr. BACON. That ought to appear, and that ought to be taken into consideration.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no doubt of that fact; but to send this man back by this dilatory process, as a plea in abatement, until he may die is, to my mind, Mr. President, preposterous.

There is not a contradiction in this record anywhere, no man opens his lips to dispute the facts as stated in the report, and the Government is as silent as the grave in respect of disputing anything asserted by this man. The case is full and complete in all its facts, and no lawyer whose opinion is worth a pinch of bug dust would stand before any tribunal and deny that the facts stated in this report, which are undisputed, entitle this man to a verdict; and yet we propose, in violation of every principle of orderly judicial procedure, to send this man back to the Committee on Claims, so that somebody may be found who will corroborate the undisputed statements he has made.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Was this bill referred to the Treasury Department?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know. It would not be so referred if I had anything to do with it.

Mr. SPOONER. Why not?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know what the Treasury Department has to do with it.

Mr. SPOONER. Would you not refer the matter to the Treasury Department for a report in relation to the case?

Mr. ALLEN. Why should it be referred to the Treasury Department?

Mr. SPOONER. To get at the facts.

Mr. ALLEN. To get at what facts?

Mr. SPOONER. Would you undertake to say that you could get at the facts simply by taking the statement of the claimant?

Mr. ALLEN. You can get at the facts in a variety of ways.

Mr. SPOONER. It seems from the report that the only way the committee resorted to of getting at the facts was by taking the statement of the claimant.

Mr. ALLEN. The committee examined into the facts and took the affidavit of the claimant, which is undisputed.

Mr. SPOONER. I only want to say to the Senator it may seem ridiculous to him; but when I was chairman of the Committee on Claims, nearly all of the bills that came before the committee were referred to the proper Department for report as to the facts.

Mr. ALLEN. I will take a statement from a Department as to the facts, but I will not take their opinion upon the facts.

Mr. SPOONER. But as to the facts in this case, it is stated that the elevator was not lighted because the pipe was filled with dirt; that it was afterwards repaired, and that there was no light in the hall, and all that. According to the old practice of the committee—and my friend from Arkansas, who was a member of the committee at the same time I was, will corroborate me about that—we would refer such a bill as this to the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate the matter in the Department and communicate the facts to the committee. I inquire if that was done in this case?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know whether it was done or not. It would not have been done with my consent, I know. I want right here, without being diverted too far from what I intended to say, to enter my protest against this namby-pamby practice of a committee sending a bill over to some Department for its opinion about that bill. What are we here for? What is the opinion of a clerk in one of these Departments, where these opinions come from, amount to? Are we to follow their opinions in the enactment of laws or in the repeal of laws? This, Mr. President, is the legislative branch of this Government.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. I will yield to the Senator in a moment.

Senators and Representatives are sent here because they are supposed to represent the wishes of their constituencies. They are supposed to know what the people want enacted into laws, and what laws the people want repealed, and not some clerk who has been living in the dusty atmosphere of a Department for twenty-five or thirty years.

Now I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I only want to ask the Senator if he is willing to take the position that the committee should hear the party in interest, who was an employee of the Treasury Department, as to the facts of this case, and then refuse to hear the testimony of everybody connected with the Department who may know the facts?

Mr. ALLEN. No; I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I certainly understood that to be the position of the Senator.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me a moment?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I have the files of the committee in this case; and as a matter of justice to the claimant I ask that the affidavits which I send to the desk may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Statement of E. D. King in regard to matter of William Leech.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, County of Washington, ss:

E. D. King, being duly sworn, deposes and says: I was employed in the branch printing office at the Treasury Department. On the morning of the 29th day of March, 1893, came to work, as usual, at about 8 o'clock. I went toward the elevator, intending to take same to the floor where the branch printing office is situated, as was my custom. Mr. William Leech, one of the elevator operators, was just ahead of me. When I reached the elevator the door was open and Leech had fallen through the shaft to the cellar. There was no light in the hall in front of the elevator at the time or in the elevator shaft at the time. The elevator had been taken up to the upper floor by some other person, who had left the door open.

I further state that I have no personal interest in the matter.

E. D. KING.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 27th day of March, 1896.

[SEAL.] JAS. N. FITZPATRICK, Notary Public.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 16, 1896.

I certify that on or about March 30, 1893, I examined Mr. William Leech, who fell down the elevator shaft at the Treasury Department. He was suffering from a fracture of the left leg above the ankle, seriously involving the ankle.

He was also badly injured about the hips and back. I was his family physician, and notwithstanding he had the closest attention of one of our most skillful surgeons he is seriously and permanently disabled, both in the back and ankle.

R. A. NEALE, M. D.,
No. 806 Nineteenth street NW.

WASHINGTON, April 1, 1896.

March 29, 1893, I was called to see William Leech, who had met with a serious accident in the elevator at the Treasury Department. He had bad fracture of lower portion of left leg, involving the ankle joint, and also contusion about the hip.

His ankle remains stiff and painful, disabling him to a great extent, and this disability is likely to be permanent.

He has constantly suffered since with pain in the back and left hip.

J. FORD THOMPSON, M. D.,

938 K STREET NW., WASHINGTON, D. C., April 3, 1896.

I have known Mr. William Leech for more than ten years. About 10 a. m., March 29, 1893, I found him at the Emergency Hospital in a critical condition, suffering from a fall down the shaft or well of the elevator in the United States Treasury building, resulting in the breaking of his left leg below the knee and dislocating one or more of the small bones of the left ankle, and also a severe injury to the left hip joint and back (lumbar region).

Anticipating from what I heard at the hospital that a surgical operation or an amputation might be required to save life, I had Mr. Leech taken to his home and employed Dr. J. Ford Thompson and placed Mr. Leech in his charge.

Mr. Leech is totally disabled for the performance of ordinary manual labor, and, judging from my own experience and his present condition, he never will be.

J. WEED COREY.

Affirmed and subscribed to before me this 3d day of April, 1896.

[SEAL.] JAS. A. FITZPATRICK, Notary Public.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, in view of these statements, which seem to supplement the report of the committee and meet the objections which have been made to the bill, I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he will not withdraw his motion to recommit?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, Mr. President. I have in my hand, among the papers which the Senator from Michigan procured from the committee room, in addition to those which he has had read, the affidavit of the person injured. That affidavit, as already appears, was the only statement reported by the Senator from Illinois, who made the report in favor of this claim. There should have been a report of the evidence which the Senator from Michigan has now put into the case and which has been read. That is not in the report of the committee, which contains nothing but this affidavit.

Mr. ALLEN. The report in this case was made by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CHANDLER. The report was made by the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. It is by no means clear from the affidavit of the claimant himself that the Government is liable. I think the case is of such importance that there ought to be a formal report made by the committee, because otherwise we do not know where we are going in this case.

A very sad occurrence will be remembered in the case of Postmaster Willett, of this city. In going into the new Post-Office building he went to one of the elevator openings, but the elevator was not there, and he fell down and was killed. His widow certainly deserves the commiseration of every one, and it may be she ought to have some donation made to her by the Government. It is opening a very wide field to pay money in cases of this kind. True it has been done by several bills heretofore passed. Workmen who have been injured in navy-yards and arsenals, or, in case of their death, their families have been paid; but it has always been done upon a committee report, very carefully stating all the facts; and this report, I submit to the Senator from Michigan, ought to embody all the facts in this case and the deliberate conclusion of the committee upon them. Therefore I do not withdraw my motion.

Mr. BACON. In connection with what the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has said, I think it proper to call the attention of the committee to the fact that it may be necessary that there should be additional evidence upon the question as to whether or not there is the permanent spinal injury to this man which has been alleged. The reason I make this suggestion is that there is a certificate from Dr. J. Ford Thompson, who is known to be an eminent surgeon, in which he fails to state that fact. He states that he was called upon to treat this unfortunate man, and he makes a careful statement with reference to the injury of his ankle and the permanent result therefrom, but all he says in reference to the spinal injury is that the man suffered with pain in his back. That is a very different thing, as we all know who have had occasion in the practice of the law to try cases involving questions of spinal concussion, from permanent spinal injury.

I do not wish to throw anything in the way of a proper recovery by this unfortunate man; but I do think, in view of the fact that there are a great many cases now pending, as I understand, before the Court of Claims, and in view of the fact that there are a great many which can be brought up, that if we propose to scale the compensation in this case upon the conclusion that there has been a permanent spinal injury, it ought not to be a matter left in doubt.

Mr. President, we have heretofore passed bills for the payment of such injuries. The Senate will remember the case of the collapse of the Ford Theater Building, in which a large number of the employees of the Government were injured. I will say that the compensation meted out in that case, although there was there a clear case of liability on the part of the Government, was not upon the scale proposed in this case.

I have the very greatest respect for the legal opinion of the Senator from Nebraska, and am very loath to fall under his severe condemnation; but I am very frank to say that I think, under the statement made by the parties in these affidavits, there is a very grave question in my mind whether there is any common-law liability; and I know of no statutory liability in this District which makes the Government liable for injuries through the negligence of its employees. That is the question here.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator allow me just a moment before this bill is recommitted?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] insists upon his motion to recommit the bill, and perhaps that is the best thing to do under the circumstances; but I want the following letter to be read from the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Carlisle.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1897.

MY DEAR SIR: I herewith return the certificates of Dr. Thompson and Dr. Neale, in the case of William Leech.

The circumstances under which Mr. Leech received the injuries from which he is now suffering, so far as they could be ascertained upon an investigation by the officials of this Department, have heretofore been communicated to the committee.

Mr. Leech is a poor man and is no doubt laboring under a disability as a result of his fall, and if, in the judgment of Congress, he has an equitable claim for remuneration, it is not probable that such action could be seriously objected to in view of what has been done in other cases.

Very truly, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE.

Hon. J. C. BURROWS,
United States Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he knows where that report from the Treasury Department is?

Mr. BURROWS. I do not. That communication was sent to me during the last Congress, when I was a member of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPOONER. That letter states that the facts resulting from an investigation by the Treasury Department have been communicated to the committee. They have not been communicated to the Senate.

Mr. BURROWS. They ought to be among the papers.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. They ought to be in the files of the Senate, where they will be accessible for all time to come.

Mr. ALLEN. Before this matter is acted upon—I shall not detain the Senate very long—I wish merely to say that I do not know of anything I have said which would lead the Senator from Georgia to think he has fallen under my condemnation, for certainly I have said nothing in reference to him.

Mr. BACON. I understand there was nothing personal in it; but I understood the Senator to express such very great confidence in the correctness of his legal proposition that under the facts in this case there was a legal liability on the part of the Government, I necessarily felt if I suggested anything to the contrary that I came under the condemnation of the very learned Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. It is true that I had expressed confidence in the legal proposition that this Government, if a private individual or a private corporation, would be liable under this state of facts. That proposition I am perfectly willing to discuss with the Senator from Georgia, if he desires to discuss it.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ALLEN. It is true as a general proposition that the Government is not liable for the negligence of a servant, but there is another principle equally as well established and applicable to this case, in my judgment, and perhaps in that respect I may fall under the condemnation of the distinguished Senator from Georgia; and that is that wherever the negligence is imputable to the principal or is the result of negligence of conduct of a vice-principal, the principal is liable. That is this case. That is all there is to it. Here was somebody in charge of this elevator, whose duty it was to superintend it during the hours when it was not in operation and to prepare it for this individual when he came to discharge his duties at a certain hour in the morning. That man was a vice-principal. He stood in the attitude toward this Government of vice-principal, and his negligence, I submit to the Senate and to the Senator from Georgia, for whose judgment I have great respect, is the negligence of the Government.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLEN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SPOONER. Does not the Senator think that that man ought to be interrogated?

Mr. ALLEN. I am not talking about the question whether he ought to be interrogated, but I am simply repelling the idea that the Senator from Georgia with a wave of his hand should say it is not worth consideration.

Mr. BACON. On the contrary, with the utmost diffidence, I expressed my very great humiliation, in view of the fact that I would entertain an opinion that would come in conflict with the very learned Senator and ex-judge from Nebraska. I did not intend to wave it away at all. I deprecated the fact, and was almost ashamed of it, and yet I ventured feebly to express it.

Mr. ALLEN. Since I have known the Senator from Georgia it has been one of the regrets of my life that I did not spend my youth under the shadow of his towering legal intellect.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, it strikes me that a case like this ought to be made out under the rules of law which would govern in the trial of a damage case for personal injuries. If the claimant is entitled to recover, it ought to be shown by the testimony. It ought to be shown by the party who was in charge of the elevator why he was there. It ought to be shown how came the door to be open. It is stated in this report that the person who was injured had charge of the elevator; that it was his duty to run it and operate it. He had left the elevator. It may be possible that he put the party in charge of the elevator. He may have been responsible for leaving the door open. This case was considered by the Committee on Claims simply upon two or three letters and an affidavit.

Every single witness who knows anything about the case ought to have been produced and his testimony given to the Senate. To simply take this case, try it, and say, "We will take the letters of two or three physicians and the affidavit of a party who was not cross-examined," is not the proper way to try a case.

It seems to me the bill ought to go back to the committee, the Government ought to be heard, and all the facts in connection with this case ought to be presented to the Senate that we may examine and understand the entire case. For that reason I am unwilling to vote in favor of the bill, and I believe it ought to go back to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to recommit the bill to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

EDWIN CULVER.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3505) granting an increase of pension to Edwin Culver.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Edwin Culver, late of Company E, First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES M. MILLER, UNITED STATES NAVY, AND OTHERS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 3734) to authorize Commander James M. Miller, United States Navy; Surg. Oliver D. Norton, United States Navy, and Mr. Edwin V. Morgan, formerly secretary of the legation of the United States at Seoul, Korea, to accept presents tendered to them by His Majesty the Emperor of Germany.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The signature of the President pro tempore was announced to the enrolled bill (S. 222) to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SOUTH AFRICAN REPUBLIC.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate resolution 133.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks for the immediate consideration of a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW February 2, 1900, as follows:

Whereas from the hour of achieving their own independence the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other people to free themselves from European domination: Therefore,

Resolved, That we watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the South African Republic against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty.

Mr. LODGE. I ask if the resolution has ever been reported by a committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not.

Mr. LODGE. I think it ought to go to a committee. I move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the resolution be read again.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to know whether the resolution has been acted upon by any committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], who does not appear to be present.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

Mr. CULBERSON (when Mr. CHILTON'S name was called). My colleague is paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. If he were present, I should vote to refer.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I will take the liberty of transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called.) I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PROCTOR (when Mr. MALLORY'S name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. I transfer it to the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], so that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] and I can vote.

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY]. Were he present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RAWLINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Utah will allow me, if it is agreeable to him, I suggest that he can pair the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA], so that he and I can both vote.

Mr. RAWLINS. All right; I consent to that arrangement, and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY], who is absent. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BATE (when Mr. TURLEY'S name was called). My colleague, as has just been stated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], is paired with him. He is absent. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. TURNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. He not being in his seat, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BATE (after having voted in the affirmative). I should like to know if the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DEBOE] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. BATE. I withdraw my vote, being paired with him.

Mr. PENROSE. I announced my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD] announces his pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. I suggest that we pair the two absent Senators, so that we may both vote. Then the Senator from New York and the Senator from Delaware will be paired.

Mr. HEITFELD. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. PENROSE. I vote "yea."

Mr. HEITFELD. I vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT. I understand that the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I suggest to him that we transfer our pairs, which will enable both of us to vote.

Mr. TURNER. Very well.

Mr. SCOTT. I vote "yea."

Mr. TURNER. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allison,	Frye,	McComas,	Perkins,
Baker,	Gear,	McCumber,	Pettus,

Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Proctor,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-one Senators have responded to the call of the roll. There is no quorum present.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 30, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 28, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read, corrected, and approved.

BENJAMIN D. GREEN AND OTHERS.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent that the report and papers and the letter of the Attorney-General accompanying the report filed yesterday in relation to the Gaynor matter may be printed in the RECORD. The request was made yesterday, but objection was made by a member on this side. It does great injustice to the author of the resolution to keep these letters and papers back. The letters are explanatory and show that there can be no objection to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I made that request yesterday and it was objected to on the Democratic side of this House. These letters and papers are all printed with the report, or will be, and they can be obtained with the report. They give the information desired. I stated yesterday to the committee that I would ask unanimous consent to have them put in the RECORD, because I thought it was a matter of such general interest that they ought to be there where everybody interested can see them. I so stated yesterday and our Democratic friends saw fit to object.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman permit me right there? I desire to state that it was objected to by a Democrat, but under a misunderstanding, and he told me afterwards that he would withdraw his objection; and if the chairman will not renew his request for unanimous consent, I will do so, in order that the report of the Judiciary Committee may be explained by the accompanying papers.

The SPEAKER. The request has already been made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TERRY. Well, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, I renew it.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I will say in regard to this that a statement has been published in the newspapers, it is alleged at the instigation of some Democratic members of this House, that I am holding up the bill relating to this Gaynor indictment at the request of a Senator from New York. The statement is untrue and was known to the man who from the press gallery of this House sent the dispatch to the city of New York to be untrue. On the bill referred to, a hearing has been fixed for Friday next. Yesterday, in order that the fullest information might be given, I made the request that the report and letters be printed in the RECORD, but it was objected to by a member on the other side——

Mr. TERRY. I want to say——

Mr. RAY of New York. Wait one minute. If this request is to be granted, I want it understood here and to go to the country that the request was made by me——

Mr. TERRY. I ask you to renew it.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will renew it. I want it understood that I have sought the broadest publicity of this matter.

Mr. TERRY. That is the reason I ask you to renew the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that there may be published in the RECORD the report he submitted yesterday upon the privileged resolution, and also the papers filed in connection therewith. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report and accompanying papers are as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred House resolution 234, a copy of which is annexed, report the same back with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

In view of the information given in the letters and papers, copies of which are annexed, the adoption of such resolution is unnecessary.

The Senate act on the subject has passed that body and is now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary of the House. A hearing thereon is to be had Friday, May 4.

RESOLUTION.

Whereas Benjamin D. Greene, John F. Gaynor, Edward H. Gaynor, and W. T. Gaynor were duly indicted by the grand jury of the United States for the southern district of Georgia, upon presentment to United States District Judge Emory Speer, at Savannah, Ga., for defrauding the Government of the United States of more than $2,000,000 in connection with Capt. Oberlin M. Carter; and

Whereas the said parties were arrested in the city of New York upon the requisition issued out of the district court of the southern district of Georgia, and upon the hearing before United States Commissioner Shields were ordered to be delivered to the custody of the proper officials to be surrendered to the officers of said district court for the southern district of Georgia; and

Whereas Judge Addison Brown, of the United States district court of New York, upon an appeal from said order of Commissioner Shields, overruled said order for the removal of said parties to Savannah, Ga., and ordered their discharge; and

Whereas the Attorney-General of the United States is reported in the public press to have stated that the decision of Judge Brown was "unwarranted by the law and the facts:" Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives what further steps, if any, have been taken to cause Benjamin D. Greene, John T. Gaynor, Edward H. Gaynor, and W. T. Gaynor to be remanded to the jurisdiction of the district court of the southern district of Georgia for trial.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 12, 1900.

SIR: On December 8, 1899, Benjamin D. Greene, John F. Gaynor, William T. Gaynor, Edward H. Gaynor, Michael A. Connally, and Oberlin M. Carter were indicted by the grand jury of the United States district court of Georgia for conspiring to defraud the United States upon two contracts relating to harbor improvements at Savannah and in Cumberland Sound. The defendant Connally was at Habana, Cuba, and upon requisition upon the War Department was there arrested and brought to Savannah to answer the indictment. The defendant Carter is now in prison under sentence of a military court-martial for offenses committed by him as a captain of engineers, in concert with the other persons named, in violation of the articles of war. The other defendants, Greene and the three Gaynors, do not reside in Georgia, but being found in the city of New York, proceedings were instituted by this Department, pursuant to the provisions of section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for their apprehension and removal to Georgia to answer to the indictment. Section 1014 is as follows:

"For any crime or offense against the United States, the offender may, by any justice or judge of the United States, or by any commissioner of a circuit court to take bail, or by any chancellor, judge of a supreme or superior court, chief or first judge of common pleas, mayor of a city, justice of the peace, or other magistrate, of any State where he may be found, and agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders in such State, and at the expense of the United States, be arrested and imprisoned, or bailed, as the case may be, for trial before such court of the United States as by law has cognizance of the offense. Copies of the process shall be returned as speedily as may be into the clerk's office of such court, together with the recognizances of the witnesses for their appearance to testify in the case. And where any offender or witness is committed in any district other than that where the offense is to be tried, it shall be the duty of the judge of the district where such offender or witness is imprisoned seasonably to issue, and of the marshal to execute, a warrant for his removal to the district where the trial is to be had."

The application for a warrant of removal was, in this instance, made before a United States commissioner in New York City, and thereupon the four defendants last named appeared before the commissioner, demanded an examination, which was accorded them, and proceedings thereon were, from time to time, had before the commissioner, as will be hereinafter more fully referred to, resulting in an order being made in February by the commissioner for the commitment of the defendants for trial, upon which an order was asked from the judge of the district court for the southern district of New York directing the removal of the defendants to Georgia for trial.

Before the commissioner in New York and before the district judge, it was contended by the defendants that under the phraseology of section 1014 the defendants could only be examined and removed agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders in such State, as regulated by the New York code, and, basing their demand upon the provisions of the New York statutes, they insisted that the Government was bound, by the production of affirmative proofs, to show alliunde the indictment the probable guilt of the defendants; and not only that, but that the defendants, by the production of evidence on their part, were entitled to rebut the presumption of proof raised by the evidence of the Government.

The commissioner held, in effect, that the certified copy of the indictment, followed by the identification of the defendants, was sufficient to justify their removal, but the district judge overruled the commissioner and held that the certified copy of the indictment was not sufficient to justify an order of removal; that the Government was required, by affirmative proof, to make out a case of probable guilt, and that the defendants were entitled to go fully into their defense, and to produce evidence on their part to rebut the presumption of guilt raised by the proofs of the Government. He distinctly held that the commissioner was bound to ascertain for himself whether, from the proof of facts and circumstances produced before him, there is probable cause to believe the defendants guilty of the offense charged; that the mode of process in such cases is precisely the same whether there is an indictment or no indictment; and that an indictment when offered by the Government is at best but evidence, in no way conclusive, and in truth is but secondary evidence; and that although the copy of an indictment may be treated as an affidavit, it is nevertheless to be judged by the same rules as other affidavits, and given weight only according to the nature and character of its averments, and the facts and circumstances which it sets forth, if any, in a manner sufficient to warrant the conclusion of probable cause to believe the accused guilty.

Holding the law to be as above stated, the learned district judge decided that the application for the removal of the defendants should be denied.

The record of the proceedings before the commissioner in this case covers over 1,100 typewritten pages. Had the testimony of the Government's witnesses and the defendants' rebutting evidence been taken, the record would have been enlarged to many thousand pages more, and months of time would have been consumed in the effort to merely transfer the defendants to the jurisdiction of the court in which they are already duly charged with crime.

It is obvious that if this is the proper construction of the law in the State of New York, it is practically impossible for the United States to secure from that jurisdiction offenders against Federal statutes to answer to indictments in districts where the offenses are committed. So far as I am informed, there is no other State in the Union in which, on the production of a certified copy of an indictment found in a Federal court against a person, duly charging the commission of an indictable offense, the accused will not be surrendered as a matter of course upon the establishment of his identity. The peculiar rule of procedure which seems to be established in the State of New York arises from the provisions of the code of that State which are claimed to be made applicable to proceedings of this nature by virtue of the following phrase in section 1014, to wit, "agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders in such State."

It is evident that under such a provision of Federal law any State by local enactments can make it impossible to remove a Federal offender who is wanted to answer an indictment in another district. In this particular instance such impossibility is practically effected by the difficulties surrounding the case. The defendants are indicted for frauds upon the Government of the gravest nature and of very large extent, committed in connection with a trusted officer of the Engineer Corps, proofs of which are spread over five or six years of governmental operations at Savannah and Cumberland Sound, and involve also, to a large extent, technical and scientific facts capable of proof only by expert witnesses and accountants and by the production of a vast mass of documentary evidence. The witnesses to substantiate the case are scattered throughout the United States, and it was with exceeding difficulty they were marshaled for the hearing before the grand jury in Georgia, and that their attendance was arranged for at the trial before the petit jury.

To compel the Government to make out a case of probable cause twice, once before a grand jury and afterwards before a local magistrate in another jurisdiction, is imposing a more onerous condition for the punishment of crime than exists under any other form of government. It is usually understood, and such is the history of grand jury procedure, that a presentment by a grand jury is based upon proof of probable cause, that the defendants are not entitled to appear or be heard in rebuttal of the facts submitted to the grand jury, and that the effect of an indictment is not to raise a presumption of guilt, but to require the defendants to submit to a trial before a court and petit jury, where every presumption is in favor of their innocence. A defendant who happens to reside within the district where he is indicted is arrested and put on trial without any further investigation. No good reason can be perceived why the fact that a defendant happens to reside in another judicial district of the United States should entitle him to have the question of his probable guilt submitted to and passed upon by a local magistrate before any force or effect whatever shall be given to the presentment of the grand jury, which is the legal and constitutional body entitled to present him for trial.

Under the doctrine maintained by the district judge in this case, if a bank officer should commit a crime against the national-banking acts in Boston and flee to California, assuming that the laws of California are similar to those of New York, it would be requisite for the United States first to indict the defendant before the grand jury in Boston and then to transport the witnesses to California and indulge in a formal trial there before a local magistrate, whose judgment would not be bound at all by the judgment or action of the grand jury, but would be free to hear the case de novo, and order the defendant either removed or discharged, in accordance with his personal views of the evidence, pro and con, adduced before him. It is respectfully submitted that such a rule of procedure as this would render the judicial power of the Federal Government in criminal cases inoperative and subject, to a large degree, to the control of State legislatures.

The Constitution guarantees, in cases of Federal offenses of the grade of felony, the right to be presented by a grand jury, but it does not guarantee that the action of the grand jury shall be submitted to the review of a local magistrate in another district before the defendant can be removed for trial into the district where he was indicted and where the offense was committed.

No such difficulty as is thus interposed against the United States is encountered where one State desires to bring a fugitive from justice from another jurisdiction to be tried within her own borders; nor in cases of extradition arising under treaties with foreign nations.

The provision of the Constitution which declares that a person charged in any State with treason, felony, or other crime who shall flee from justice and be found in another State shall, on demand of the executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime is a provision intended to facilitate the administration of justice as between the States and not with the Federal Government. Efficiency was given to that constitutional provision by the act of February 12, 1793, which was substantially reproduced as section 5278 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. Under this statute a person indicted in a State court for a crime will be rendered up for extradition to the State where the indictment is found by the authorities of any other State, upon the production of a duly certified copy of the indictment and the establishment of his identity and presence within the State from which he is demanded.

In such cases no such privileges as, under Judge Brown's ruling, are accorded the defendants in the case now pending can be claimed. No witnesses to prove the offense are required from the demanding State, nor is the defendant allowed, as a matter of right, to produce any proof in rebuttal. The question in all such cases is not whether the person demanded is guilty, but whether he is duly charged with the commission of a crime. Such should be the requirement in Federal cases. Under the sixth amendment to the Constitution, the United States is required to bring the accused to trial in the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed. That which the Government is thus by its Constitution required to do it should be given adequate power to do.

An indictment found by a grand jury in the judicial district where the crime is committed is the only condition which the Constitution imposes upon the Federal authorities to bring to trial offenders against the laws of the United States. No reason can be suggested why the several States should be permitted, of their own motion, to impose other or more onerous conditions. Effect should be given in all parts of the United States to the solemn presentment of a grand jury in one particular judicial district, and the law should not throw unusual and onerous obstacles about the efforts of the United States to bring criminals to trial after they have been duly charged by a Federal grand jury with criminal offenses. The power of the nation to bring to justice offenders against its laws should be as broad as its territory, and unhampered by any reference to or dependence on State codes.

I have not questioned the technical correctness of Judge Brown's decision so far as it is based upon a construction of the peculiar provisions of the New York code. I prefer to submit the matter to Congress, in order that such provisions of State legislation as may be used, as they have been used in this case, to prevent indicted persons being brought to trial, may be, by the action of Congress, rendered hereafter inoperative.

I deem this matter of so much importance as to justify my calling your attention at length to the subject, and inclosing you a copy of the opinion of Judge Brown in this particular case. I also think the matter is one which calls for legislative relief, and I accordingly have drafted a bill under which any person indicted in a Federal court for a Federal offense may be removed into the district where the indictment is found upon the presentation of a certified copy of the indictment to a Federal justice, judge, or commissioner. I respectfully urge that this bill be introduced and passed, in order that there may be no failure of justice in the case referred to, and in similar cases that are liable hereafter to arise.

There can be no safer asylum for fugitives from justice than would be afforded by the continuance in any State of such a rule of practice as is established by this decision.

I may point out that since this indictment was found, in December last, another defendant, indicted subsequently in a State court in Georgia, has been brought from Morocco and put upon his trial, while these particular defendants, residing in another district in another State of the Union, are not delivered up for trial, notwithstanding the grand jury of Georgia has solemnly found, upon evidence presented to it, that they should be held to answer for the serious offenses with which they are charged.

I also beg to inclose a presentment recently found by the grand jury in the United States district court of Georgia upon this subject.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, yours, etc.,

JOHN W. GRIGGS, Attorney-General.

HON. GEO. W. RAY,
Chairman Judiciary Committee, House of Representatives.

An act to provide for the removal to the proper district for trial of persons indicted for offense against the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That where any person, indicted for any crime or offense against the United States, in any district, shall be or be found in any other district, it shall be lawful, and it is hereby made the duty of the district attorney of the district in which such indictment is found, to deliver, or cause to be delivered, a copy of such indictment, certified by the clerk of the court in which the same is pending, to a judge or justice of the United States or a United States commissioner in the district where such indicted person is or may be found; and thereupon it shall be the duty of such judge, justice, or commissioner to issue to the United States marshal of the district a warrant for the arrest of the person named in the indictment, and upon the return of the warrant with the body of the person so named, the judge, justice, or commissioner shall, upon being satisfied that the person arrested is the person indicted, make an order to the marshal directing the removal of such person to the district wherein the indictment is pending, and it shall be the duty of the marshal to execute such order. In bailable cases the judge, justice, or commissioner before whom such proceedings are had may admit the defendant to bail for his appearance at the court to which he is held to answer the indictment.

In the district court of the United States for the eastern division of the southern district of Georgia. In the matter of the grand jury.

Special presentment.

The grand jurors of the United States chosen, selected, and sworn in and for the eastern division of the southern district of Georgia, at the February adjourned term, 1900, respectfully present to the court as follows:

That at the last November, 1899, term of this court, to wit, on December 8, 1899, the grand jurors of the United States for this division and district returned into court a true bill of indictment against Benjamin D. Greene, Edward H. Gaynor, John F. Gaynor, William T. Gaynor, and others, contractors charged with conspiracy with Oberlin M. Carter, engineer officer in charge of river and harbor improvements in this district, through which it is charged the Government has been defrauded to the amount of several million dollars of the moneys appropriated by Congress for the improvement of the harbors of Savannah, Brunswick, and Cumberland Sound.

It further appears from documents of file and examined by this body that the United States district attorney for this district promptly caused to be transmitted to the United States attorney in New York a duly certified copy of said indictment, and that on December 14, 1899, the defendants, Benjamin D. Greene, John F. Gaynor, William T. Gaynor, and Edward H. Gaynor, were arrested, under section 1014, R. S., by the United States marshal for the southern district of New York, under proceedings taken by the district attorney for the southern district of New York before Commissioner John A. Shields, based on said indictment. The disposition of such matters, by requiring the defendants to give bail for appearance at the court where the indictment has been found, or by warrant of removal where bail is not given, has generally been, as this body is advised, a matter simply of identifying the defendants as the persons indicted and examining into the legal sufficiency of the indictment, usually taking but a day or two at most.

This body is informed, however, that the proceedings in New York in this matter have been dragging along now for over three months and a half. The commissioner holding up his finding two months, and since his decision the matter of issuing the warrant of removal having been pending before the district judge there for over six weeks with no decision thereon. In the meantime the defendants are enlarged on bond there in the sums of twenty thousand and ten thousand dollars only, respectively. While it is stated that a careful estimate made by the engineer officer now in charge of the district indicates that the defendants obtained illegally during the years from 1891 to 1897 sums aggregating $2,532,676. If the indictment be valid, there should have been a prompt removal. No court has held the indictment defective. If defective, as it is stated the defendants' claim in opposition to the proceedings for removal, there would seem to be overwhelming reasons why there should have been prompt action on the part of the courts.

It appears upon the face of the indictment that against all the acts charged in the indictment the statute of limitations will have run within three months from this date, and has already run on some of the acts charged. If defective in form, a prompt decision would have enabled another grand jury to make a new presentment. But with the delays already had, three months and a half on the simple proceedings before the commissioner and judge under section 1014, Revised Statutes, and with probable application for habeas corpus, it is probable that if the courts finally conclude the present indictment is defective that the statute of limitations will have run, and the parties charged by a grand jury of the United States with the most gigantic fraud of the century against the Government will escape even arraignment before the bar of justice. It is a matter of public notoriety that since these proceedings were instituted in New York a defendant indicted in a State court in Georgia for embezzling some twenty thousand dollars was arrested in the jurisdiction of the Sultan of Morocco and extradited across the Atlantic Ocean, while all the power of the United States Government, with the best efforts of the Attorney-General and his subordinates, seems unable to bring defendants from the State of New York to Georgia for trial in its own courts.

Whatever be the action which may now or hereafter be taken by the courts in this case, the delays already had with the possibility of a total failure of justice following therefrom in this and similar cases which arise seem to indicate that if the proceedings in this case in New York are justified by law, then the laws of the United States for bringing persons charged with crime from one district to another are so defective that there should be prompt action on the part of Congress to remedy the evil.

We recommend that copies of this special presentment be forwarded to the President, the Attorney-General, and to the Senators and Members of Congress from Georgia for their consideration and appropriate action.

Respectfully submitted.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
Southern District of New York.

The United States against Benjamin D. Greene, John F. Gaynor, William T. Gaynor, and Edward H. Gaynor, and others.

Indictment—Removal—Section 1014, Revised Statutes.

Henry L. Burnett, Marion Erwin, United States district attorneys, and Ernest E. Baldwin, assistant attorney for the United States.
Abram J. Rose and L. Laflin Kellogg, for defendants.
Brown, J.

The above four defendants, with Michael A. Connally and Oberlin M. Carter, were indicted by the grand jury in the eastern division of the southern district of Georgia on December 8, 1899, for conspiring to defraud the United States upon two contracts, one for improving the harbor at Savannah and the other for work in Cumberland Sound. Upon an affidavit to this effect by one of the assistants of the United States attorney, referring to a certified copy of the indictment, a warrant was issued by a United States commissioner for this district, under section 1014 of the United States Revised Statutes, for the apprehension of the four defendants above named.

The defendant Greene resides at Stamford, Conn.; John F. and W. T. Gaynor in Onondaga County, N. Y., and E. H. Gaynor at Boston, Mass. The defendants, on notice, appeared before the commissioner and demanded an examination, and proceedings thereon were from time to time had before the commissioner, who, upon finding probable cause that the offenses charged had been committed, ordered the commitment of the defendants for trial. An order is now asked for their removal to the eastern district of Georgia for trial.

The stenographer's notes of the proceedings, returned by the commissioner, consist of about 1,100 pages, showing, however, no other evidence of the commission of the offense than a certified copy of the indictment. Some evidence was given as to the identity of the defendants as the persons charged, and this was not seriously contested. Aside from this and the arguments of counsel, the whole record consists of little except rulings upon the evidence on behalf of the defendants sought to be introduced, and numerous exhibits, all of which, so far as they pertained to the merits or tended to show the innocence of the accused and the want of probable cause, were rejected, mostly upon the ground that the question of guilt or innocence should only be heard and determined upon a trial under the indictment.

Upon this record the defendants object to any order of removal on the ground, first, that the indictment is bad upon its face; second, that it was not properly proved, since neither was the original indictment produced nor was the copy, though certified by the deputy clerk, duly authenticated as an exemplified copy; third, that by reason of its vagueness, its lack of specification of facts and circumstances, and its inconsistencies and contradictions in different parts it is insufficient evidence of probable cause of guilt; fourth, that evidence was improperly rejected tending to show that the grand jury was illegally drawn and constituted, and the indictment, therefore, void: and, fifth, that the defendants were virtually denied a hearing by the rejection of all evidence tending to show their innocence.

As respects procedure, the present case is identical with that of In re Dana (68 Fed., 886), in which this court, upon careful consideration, pointed out the course necessary to be pursued in cases of this character under section 1014 of the United States Revised Statutes and under the law of this State thereby virtually adopted. The views there expressed seem to have been approved by Lacombe, J., in Price's case (83 Fed., 830; 84 Fed., 636; affirmed, 85 Fed., 84, 87), where the course indicated in the Dana case was followed by the examination of several witnesses to show probable cause, as well as the production of an exemplified copy of the indictment. It was also approved in the case of In re Wood (95 Fed., 288), and so far as I am aware, it has not been disapproved in any subsequent reported case.

In view of these decisions, which were repeatedly called to the commissioner's attention, I find it difficult to understand the disregard of them in the rejection of the great mass of competent evidence and exhibits offered in the defendants' behalf. In that decision it was pointed out that the proceeding for commitment and removal under section 1014 is an original proceeding, to be conducted according to the laws of the State in similar proceedings before committing magistrates; that the object of the proceeding is to enable the commissioner to ascertain for himself whether, from the proof of facts and circumstances produced before him, there is probable cause to believe the defendants guilty of the offense charged; that the mode of proceeding in such cases is precisely the same whether there is an indictment or no indictment (see also Price vs. McCarthy, 89 Fed., 84, per Wallace, C. J.); and that an indictment, when offered by the prosecution, is at best but evidence, in no way conclusive, and in truth is but secondary evidence (which to a certain extent is admissible on such examinations), and that although the copy of an indictment may be treated as an affidavit, it is, nevertheless, to be judged by the same rules as other affidavits and given weight only according to the nature and character of its averments and the facts and circumstances which it sets forth, if any, in a manner sufficient to warrant the conclusion of probable cause to believe the accused guilty.

By a singular inversion, however, the best reason for the admission of the defendants' proposed evidence, namely, its tendency to show innocence of the charge and the lack of probable cause, was in this instance made the reason for excluding it. A certified copy of the indictment having been received by the commissioner against the defendants' objection, it was thereupon contended by the prosecution, and virtually ruled by the commissioner, that the evidence was closed as respects the question of guilt, and that no evidence disproving it could be allowed, since that would be "trying the issue" here instead of in Georgia. Thus, although the right to show want of probable cause was admitted in form, it was in substance denied, since whatever would disprove the alleged offense was for that very reason excluded.

Precisely opposite was the ruling of this court in the Dana case, where it was shown, as I have said, that by section 1014 (the sole authority in the Federal courts for commitment or removal in such cases) the proceeding before commissioners must be in conformity with the existing State procedure. Mr. Justice Curtis, in United States vs. Rundlett (2 Curtis, 41), says:

"My opinion is that it was the intention of Congress by these words to assimilate all proceedings for holding accused persons to answer before a court of the United States to proceedings had for similar purposes by the laws of the State where the proceedings should take place; * * * the prisoner is not only to be arrested and imprisoned, but bailed agreeably to the usual mode of process in the State."

See, also, United States vs. Horton's Securities (2 Dillon, 94). Mr. Justice Miller and other eminent judges have confirmed this interpretation. See In re Dana, 86 Fed., 893-894 and cases ante.

In States, therefore, where the accused has no right to examine witnesses in his own behalf before a committing magistrate he can not do so in proceedings under section 1014; but in other States, as in New York, where this right does exist and is in daily practice, it can not be lawfully denied him.

In New York the right of the accused to produce witnesses in his own behalf before committing magistrates was confirmed by express statute more than seventy years ago, and more than forty years before the enactment of section 1014 of the United States Revised Statutes; and such is the uniform course of procedure. The New York Revised Statutes (1828) declare (volume 2, page 708):

"17. After the examination of the prisoner is completed, his witnesses, if he have any, shall be sworn and examined, and he may have the assistance of counsel in such examination."

This practice is ancient. (Dallon's Jus. (1742), chapter 165; 1 Chit. Cr. L., 79.)

The existence of an indictment in another jurisdiction has no bearing upon the application of this statute to proceedings for commitment, or to the course of the examination when an examination is demanded pursuant to the statute, nor upon the commissioner's duty to take whatever competent evidence is offered by the defendant tending to show the want of probable cause; and for that purpose and to that extent the proceeding is, of necessity, like the proceedings before the State magistrates, a partial preliminary hearing on the merits.

It is urged that under section 1014 the similitude to State proceedings may be preserved by treating a Federal indictment from another district as a State indictment found in one county is treated in another county wherein the defendant is arrested. That analogy, however, could only be followed by the indorsement of a bench warrant from the Federal district where the indictment was had by the judge of the district where the accused might be found. But that practice, if ever in use, has been long since abandoned. Besides the authorities opposed to it cited in the Dana case (68 Fed., 893, 894), it was again disapproved by Lacombe, J., in the late case of Price (83 Fed., 830), as oppressive and unauthorized. Section 1014, moreover, plainly contemplates the examination of witnesses and provides for a return of the "recognizances" for their appearance to testify in the case. In proceeding under that section, therefore, the commissioner must receive all evidence touching probable cause of guilt that a State committing magistrate would be bound to take, without reference to any subsequent trial upon indictment.

The objection that this would be trying the "issue" is premature. There is no "issue" as respects the indictment until the defendants are committed, removed, and arraigned, and plead not guilty. The inquiry before the commissioner is for the very purpose of ascertaining whether there is sufficient ground to commit and remove the accused and oblige him to plead and stand trial, and to enable him under the State statute to arrest the proceedings in limine, if he can, by proving that there is no probable cause for the accusation. That was the only "issue" before the commissioner on this hearing.

In New York the statute above cited has been followed in the Code of Criminal Procedure by still further provisions designed to safeguard accused persons from arbitrary, mistaken, or malicious commitments (188-214). And in the absence of some act of Congress expressly dispensing with any other evidence than the indictment itself, as in extradition proceedings, it is impossible that in a proceeding under section 1014, which makes applicable the State laws, the rights of citizens expressly guarded by the State laws can be set aside by a mere indictment in a distant jurisdiction, so that without a word in their own defense citizens could be thereupon transported for trial hundreds or even thousands of miles away from their homes, in contravention of the act of Congress and the laws of the States, which it recognizes and adopts. Such a proceeding would be not merely erroneous, but illegal.

The extradition cases cited on the argument, whether interstate or international, are wholly inapplicable. Both those proceedings are regulated by wholly different statutes or by treaty stipulations. In interstate extradition the acts of Congress as well as the State statutes exclude altogether any inquiry into the guilt or innocence of the accused, the only conditions of the statutory obligation of the executive to return the accused being, first, that there is an indictment or information against him (of which an exemplified copy is sufficient evidence, N. Y. Crim. Code, 827-829), and, second, that the accused is a fugitive from justice (U. S. Rev. Stat., 5278), in re Leary (10 Ben., 197).

It is unnecessary to consider the questions arising on the exclusion of the evidence touching the alleged illegality in the drawing of the Georgia grand jury, or to discuss at much length either the sufficiency of the very complicated indictment as a pleading or its force and weight as evidence. As explained in the Dana case, those two questions are altogether distinct; and while I have some doubt but do not need to pass on the question of the sufficiency of the indictment as a pleading, I have no doubt that, viewed as an affidavit, it is insufficient in its statement of facts and circumstances to justify a removal when, as in this case, an examination has been demanded by the accused and its sufficiency challenged. Witnesses for the prosecution, having at least some knowledge of the facts, were in attendance before the commissioner, but were not examined as to the offense, nor were they allowed to testify for the defendants on cross-examination, so that the facts and circumstances on which the magistrate should form his judgment have not in fact been made known. I add some observations on the indictment as a pleading and as evidence.

2. The gist of the offense of conspiracy is in the illegal combination and intent, and the statute of limitations begins to run from the time the conspiracy is formed. The crime may be complete though the intent was never accomplished. And though the statute offense requires an overt act "to be done by one or more of the parties to the conspiracy," or some act "to effect its object," yet this act, as in the common-law offense of conspiracy, is not regarded as an essential part of the offense itself, the statutory provision being construed as requiring such an act to be proved as a condition of conviction in order to give to the defendants a locus penitentiæ. (United States vs. Britton, 108 U. S., 199.) It is held to be sufficient, therefore, if the overt act is "so described as to apprise the defendant what act is intended to be given in evidence as tending to show that the unlawful agreement was put in operation." (United States vs. Donan, 11 Blatch., 168; United States vs. Boyden, 1 Low., 266; United States vs. Sanche, 7 Fed., 715; United States vs. Bonson, 70 Fed., 591.)

In the first and principal count the indictment states, in effect, two conspiracies to defraud the United States. The first, not directly charged as a conspiracy, but called a "fraudulent scheme," and set forth by way of inducement, is alleged to have been formed on or about January 1, 1891, and to have been thereafter "in continuous process of execution until October 1, 1897." As an original conspiracy this was evidently outlawed before the indictment was found in December, 1899. The second conspiracy, and the one relied on, is an alleged conspiracy formed January 1, 1897, to defraud the United States "by applying the previous 'fraudulent scheme' to the execution of two contracts previously obtained, it is alleged, by means of said fraudulent scheme on October 6, 1896;" and counts 2, 3, 4, and 5 state certain alleged overt acts done to carry this new conspiracy into effect. These averments of overt acts, however, can not be resorted to in order to aid any defective averments as to the conspiracy itself or as to the means by which it was to be accomplished, which in this case were necessary to be set forth.

As the original fraudulent scheme of conspiracy is alleged to have been in continuous process of execution from January, 1891, to October, 1897, and therefore included the two contracts of October 8, 1896 (the only subjects in the indictment), it is evident that the averment of a new conspiracy on January 1, 1897, to apply the old conspiracy to the execution of the contracts obtained by means of the former one (at a time excluded by the statute of limitations) and already in course of execution is only a pleader's device to avoid the effect of the statute of limitations as against the original fraudulent scheme. But as each new overt act in furtherance of the common purpose becomes in law a new conspiracy, the time of the conspiracy may be laid within the period of the statute of limitations if the overt act was within that period, the prior combination, if established, and the later overt act being evidence from which a jury may infer the new conspiracy. (People vs. Mather, 9 Wend., 229; Com. vs. Bartilson, 85 Penn. St., 482, 489.)

I have considerable doubt, however, whether the averment of the means by which the conspiracy of January 1, 1897, was to be effected are indicated with such definiteness, clearness, and certainty as seems to be required (see 4 Encycl. of Plead., 722). In Commonwealth vs. Hunt (4 Metcalf, 111), in which this subject is fully discussed, Shaw, chief justice, says (page 125):

"Conspiracy is an offense which especially demands the application of that wise and humane rule of the common law that an indictment shall state, with as much certainty as the nature of the case will admit, the facts which constitute the crime intended to be charged.

"This is required to enable the defendant to meet the charge and prepare for his defense, and, in case of acquittal or conviction, to show by the record the identity of the charge, so that he may not be indicted a second time for the same offense. * * * This fundamental rule is confirmed by the declaration of rights, which declares that no subject shall be held to answer for any crime or offense until the same is fully and plainly, substantially and formally described to him. * * * If the criminality of the offense which is intended to be charged consists in the agreement to compass or promote some purpose not of itself criminal or unlawful, by the use of fraud, force, falsehood, or other criminal or unlawful means, such intended use of fraud, force, falsehood, or other criminal or unlawful means must be set out in the indictment."

In the prior case of Lambert vs. The People (9 Cowen, 578) it was also held upon elaborate consideration by Marcy, J., that—

"Where in an indictment for conspiracy the object of the conspiracy is not a legal crime, the means intended to be used must be particularly set forth and show that those means are criminal."

This doctrine has been repeatedly enforced in the decisions of the Supreme Court. (United States vs. Cruikshank, 92 U. S., 542, 558; United States vs. Britton, 108 U. S., 199; United States vs. Carll, 105 U. S., 611; United States vs. Hess, 124 U. S., 483; Pettibone vs. United States, 148 U. S., 197; Blitz vs. United States, 153 U. S., 308, 315; State vs. Parker, 43 N. H., 83.)

Now, the only means stated by which the alleged conspiracy of January 1, 1897, was to be carried out is by "applying" the prior "fraudulent scheme to the execution and completion of work under the contracts of October 8, 1896, and in obtaining the money in fraudulent accounts which should be rendered thereunder." But of the fifteen or twenty devices which it is alleged that scheme "contemplated," three-fourths relate to the terms, specifications, and letting out of the contracts themselves, so that most of the scheme could not possibly be "applied" to a conspiracy formed on January 1, 1897, several months after the contracts were let out. Of the remaining means or devices, what ones are meant to be charged is left wholly undefined. This is all the more vague and uncertain since even the original fraudulent scheme itself is only alleged to have contemplated that the conspirators "would use some one, or more, or all of said means and devices, and such additional devices as might become necessary." This is certainly very vague and uncertain as to the means used.

The overt act charged in the second count is irrelevant, since it does not appear to be in any way connected with the conspiracy alleged, nor within any one of the means or devices set forth in the conspiracy count. The overt acts charged in counts 3, 4, and 5 are the presentment of alleged "fraudulent claims" to Captain Carter, of the Corps of Engineers, without any statement how or wherein they were fraudulent. The items of the claims are given, dated July 1, 1897, apparently verbatim, for work and material furnished under the contracts of October 8, 1896. It would be naturally inferred that the charge intended was that these bills were in some way false and not according to the contract; that is, that the work done and the materials supplied were less than was claimed, or that they were of inferior quality, or in some way different from the contract, or that the price was incorrect.

But there is no such averment as respects any of the bills referred to in any of the counts; nor is it stated that any one of them is false; while from other passages in the indictment, as well as from the observations of counsel in the stenographer's report of the proceedings, it would seem that the supposed fraudulent character of the bills was not founded upon anything incorrect in them or in the work, but upon the alleged fraudulent devices contemplated in the preparation and letting of the contracts themselves, no single one of which devices is, however, definitely alleged to have been really employed. Such averments not only do not reasonably apprise the defendants of the nature of the charges they must meet, but are calculated to mislead them. This applies to all the counts except the second.

The conspiracy charged in the sixth count relates wholly to future contracts to be let thereafter—i. e., after January 1, 1897—while the overt acts stated in counts 7 and 8 relate wholly to the prior contracts of October 8, 1896. On this additional ground counts 6, 7, and 8 would seem to be necessarily bad.

Counts 9 and 10 allege conspiracies on July 1, 1897, as respects the same contracts and bills referred to under the conspiracy of January 1, 1897, in counts 1 to 5. As the presentment of false or fraudulent bills for payment to a Government officer is itself a criminal offense (section 5438, Rev. Stat.), I should regard these counts as good had the nature of the fraud been sufficiently indicated.

3. Without passing definitely upon these objections to the indictment as a pleading, they are much more important when the indictment is offered as evidence of the facts and circumstances upon which a magistrate, after examination demanded, is called upon to find probable cause of guilt. Mere defects in pleading might be disregarded if a crime was otherwise sufficiently shown to have been committed, since commitment and removal may in proper cases be made without any prior indictment. (In re Price, 89 Fed., 94.) But when there is no evidence of guilt except such as a copy of the indictment itself, considered as an affidavit, affords, there is nothing to cure its defects or its failure to give a consistent, clear, and satisfactory statement of the evidential facts on which the conclusion of probable guilt may be based.

The mere fact that indictment had been found in another jurisdiction, without producing it, is no evidence of probable cause before a committing magistrate; and a mere affidavit of that fact only will not justify even the issuing of the warrant of arrest. (Ex parte Solomon, 1 Abb. N. S., 347; Ex parte Leland, 7 Abb. N. S., 64.) It is only the facts and circumstances stated in the indictment, if any such are properly stated, that are of any value as evidence, and these statements are to be judged and weighed according to what they may be worth.

The present indictment, even more than that in the Dana case, shows that it was drawn and designed as a pleading only, and not as a statement of the facts from which a judicial finding of probable guilt might reasonably be drawn.

(1) Its statement of two separate conspiracies with reference to the same two contracts of October 8, 1896, viz, one on January 1, 1897, and another on July 1, 1897, and both upon the same overt acts, since it appears that all of the seven months' bills were presented for allowance together and at the same time, on July 1, 1896, is most improbable as a fact, though allowable as a pleading, both being evidently adopted, as I have said, to avoid the statute of limitations, which would be applicable to a charge of conspiracy based upon either the original scheme or the contracts of 1896.

(2) The inconsistency in the first count and its consequent vagueness are manifest in alleging that on January 1, 1897, there was a conspiracy to apply the prior "fraudulent scheme" as a whole to past contracts when most of the particulars of that alleged scheme could not possibly be thereafter applied to them; and of the rest there is no definite statement of what devices were to be applied, or that any one was in fact applied.

(3) The mere statement of the presentment of "fraudulent claims," without any indication how or wherein they were fraudulent, which is the basis of all the counts except the second, is not a proper or sufficient statement of any facts or circumstances on which a judicial judgment of probable cause of guilt can be based; it would not be sufficient for an arrest even in a petty civil case.

(4) There is no allegation anywhere in the indictment that the work and materials supplied and the bills presented were not strictly according to contract; that the prices claimed or allowed were exorbitant; that improper work was passed or improper substitutions made, nor are any facts stated showing actual fraud, or that the Government has been defrauded of a dollar. Even if no fuller statement on these points is essential as a matter of pleading, it is indispensable as evidence of probable cause of guilt that some such actual fraud in the overt acts should be shown on the hearing as upon the trial in order to prove that these acts were in truth in pursuance of the alleged conspiracy, and were not done in an honest fulfillment of the contracts referred to, as the defendants had a right to do within the locus penitentiæ which the statute allows.

In most cases, however, the fraudulent or criminal character of the overt acts is the chief if not the only evidence of the unlawful conspiracy (Com. vs. Bartilson, 85 Penn. St., 482; 2 Wharton Cr. L., 246). The indictment being the only evidence of guilt that is presented, some facts showing fraud in the overt acts are as necessary to appear there as they would be necessary to be proved at the trial. In this indictment there are charges of fraud and of "fraudulent claims," but not a fact or circumstance is stated from which a magistrate or judge could rightfully find actual fraud or probable cause for forming such a judgment. The indictment, in other words, is purely a charge, a pleading for the purpose of putting the defendants on trial without any evidential facts from which any fraud or conspiracy can be judicially inferred.

(5) The failure of the prosecution to examine the Government witnesses present, Captain Gillette among others, in reference to the offense itself, and the persistent objection to any cross-examination of these same witnesses and to the defendants' examination of others having knowledge of the facts, resulting in the exclusion of all testimony as to the probable guilt of the accused, which is the principal object of such examinations, together with the circumstances above stated, show that the withholding of all evidential facts, both in the indictment and before the commissioner, was designed in consequence of a misapprehension of the proper course of procedure under section 1014 in connection with the statutes of this State and the ordinary practice thereunder.

I know nothing of the probable guilt or innocence of the accused except from the record before me. Considerable evidence which was offered, and under the law should have been received, indicates innocence so far as it goes. Opposed to this is the Georgia indictment alone, which on examination proves to be a bare pleading, barren of any such statement of facts and circumstances as to warrant any judicial finding of probable fraud. Of the eight overt acts alleged two of the principal ones, viz, the issuing of two checks for the whole work referred to under both contracts of October 8, 1896, were done in New York, where the offense, if any, was therefore equally triable. (4 Encycl. Pl. and Pr., 708; People vs. Mather, 4 Wend., 229; Com. vs. Bartilson, supra.)

The accused, even if guilty, though triable in Georgia also, can only be removed to that jurisdiction by proceedings regularly conducted according to law. To order their removal otherwise would be an illegal act and scarcely distinguishable from virtual abduction under the forms of law.

For the above reasons the application should be denied and the defendants discharged, without prejudice to such other proceedings as may be advised.

APRIL 4, 1900.

APRIL 23, 1900.

DEAR SIR: Will you kindly inform this committee at the earliest practicable day what steps, if any, have been taken to secure the arrest and transfer of Benjamin D. Green, John T. Gaynor, Edward H. Gaynor, and W. T. Gaynor, under indictment in the southern district of Georgia, to that district for trial, since the rendering of the decision of Judge Brown, given in the southern district of New York?

2. Whether or not it is the purpose of the authorities of the United States to proceed under the provisions of existing law and present to the courts or commissioners of the United States courts in the State of New York any evidence showing probable cause to believe the said persons or any of them guilty of the offense charged in the indictment referred to.

3. If such is not the purpose, please give the reasons for not proceeding in conformity to the decision of Judge Brown.

4. Kindly inform this committee whether or not the Attorney-General of the United States has publicly stated, or stated for the public press, that the decision of Judge Brown in such matter was "unwarranted by the law and the facts."

5. If, in your opinion, such decision was not warranted by the law or the facts, may the error be corrected on appeal?

Respectfully, yours,

GEO. W. RAY,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary.

Hon. JOHN W. GRIGGS,
Attorney-General United States.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 26, 1900.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 23d instant, submitting certain questions relative to the prosecution of the indictment against Benjamin D. Greene, John F. Gaynor, Edward H. Gaynor, and William T. Gaynor, and have the honor to reply as follows:

First. I have not, since the rendering of the decision of Judge Brown, taken any steps to secure the arrest and transfer of the defendants, except to recommend to you, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House, and to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, the passage of a bill which would secure the transfer of these defendants to the district of Georgia in which they are indicted, without putting the Government to the trouble and delay of bringing its witnesses to New York, proving a case of probable cause against the defendants there, and then allowing the defendants to go into their defense.

Second. It is not the purpose of the Department to proceed under the provisions of existing law and present to the courts, or commissioners of the United States courts, in the State of New York, evidence showing probable cause to believe the defendants guilty of the offense charged in the indictment referred to, unless Congress shall fail to pass the legislation which I have recommended.

Third. The reasons for not proceeding in conformity to the decision of Judge Brown, briefly stated, are that to do so would require a very large expenditure of time and money, and great difficulty in securing the attendance of the Government's witnesses, and would require the Government to expose, before the trial, the evidence on which it relies to convict the defendants. An additional reason is that this Department does not believe that the law does require or should require such a course to be taken where defendants have been duly indicted in one district of the United States and take refuge in another.

Fourth. The Attorney-General of the United States did not publicly state, or state for the public press, that the decision of Judge Brown in such matter was unwarranted by the law and the facts, but I am of the opinion that the decision of Judge Brown in overruling the finding and action of Commissioner Shields was unwarranted by the law.

Fifth. Whether such error can be corrected on appeal is a matter of doubt, and certainly is a matter of such great delay as to render the efficient prosecution of the defendants practically impossible.

For a further statement of the views of this Department on this subject, I respectfully refer you to my communication which accompanied the draft of a proposed bill to remedy the defect in procedure which has caused the embarrasement of the Government in this case.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. GRIGGS, Attorney-General.

Hon. GEORGE W. RAY,
Chairman Judiciary Committee, House of Representatives.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the credentials of Francis R. Lassiter, a member-elect from the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia, to fill the unexpired term of Hon. Sydney P. Epes, deceased, are here. I ask that the credentials be read and that Mr. Lassiter be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The credentials will be read, and also a communication filed with respect thereto.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA:

This is to certify that at a meeting of the board of State canvassers, held at the office of the secretary of the commonwealth, the 27th day of April, 1900, on an examination of the official abstract of votes on file in that office it was ascertained and determined that at the special election held according to law on the 19th day of April, 1900, Francis R. Lassiter was duly elected a member of the House of Representatives of the United States for the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia to fill the unexpired term of Hon. Sydney P. Epes, deceased.

Given under my hand and under the lesser seal of the Commonwealth, at Richmond, this 27th day of April, A. D. 1900.

[SEAL.]

J. T. LAWLESS,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

The following protest was also read:

A PROTEST.

To the Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN: I protest against the seating of Major Lassiter as the Representative of the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia on the ground that the election held on the 19th instant is a paper vote and was not actually cast; and, if possible, I shall file a more formal contest to his seat in the said House of Representatives if you should seat him on the face of the returns.

Very respectfully,

JAMES SELDON COWDON.
The candidate receiving the highest acknowledged opposition vote to Major Lassiter.

The SPEAKER. The time has not expired for the party whose communication has been read to file notice of contest, and the Chair sees no reason why the gentleman whose credentials have been read should not be sworn in unless the House desires to take some action in the matter. [A pause.] The gentleman will please come forward and take the oath.

Mr. Lassiter came forward, accompanied by Mr. HAY and Mr. UNDERWOOD, and was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the agricultural appropriation bill has been returned from the Senate with sundry amendments. I ask that the bill be now taken up, that all the amendments of the Senate be nonconcurred in, and that the House ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the request of the gentleman from New York will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, and Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi as the conferees on the part of the House.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN NEW YORK.

Mr. RAY of New York. I rise to submit a conference report on Senate bill No. 268.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, it would be an unnecessary consumption of time to read the report, because without explanation it would not convey to the House the information desired. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD and that the statement of the House conferees be read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD and the statement of the House conferees will be read.

There was no objection.

The report of the committee of conference is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the act (S. 268) entitled "An act to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the northern district of New York, to divide the same into two districts, and provide for the terms of court to be held therein and the officers thereof and the disposition of pending causes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

1. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments to section 1 of said act, and agree to the same.

2. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments to section 2 of said act, and agree to the amendment in line 18. That both Houses agree to a substitute for the first House amendment to said section, and which amendment, to be inserted after the word "shall," in line 15, page 2, will read as follows: "possess and exercise all the powers conferred by existing law upon the judges of the district courts of the United States, and who shall, as to all business and proceedings arising in said western district as hereby constituted or transferred thereto, succeed to and." The House recedes from its amendment for which the above is a substitute.

3. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments, page 2, in lines 24 and 25 of section 3 of said act, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendments to section 3 of said act, in line 3, page 3.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments of section 3, in line 4, page 3, and that the House recede from its amendments in said line of said section and agree to a new amendment, viz: In line 4, page 3, section 3, strike out the word "third" and insert in lieu thereof the word "first;" and strike out the word "January," as proposed by the House amendment, and the word "April," as found in the original act, and insert in lieu thereof the word "December."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments to said section 3, in lines 5 and 6, page 3, and the House recede from its amendments, and that both Houses agree upon new amendments in said lines as follows: In line 5 strike out the word "second" and insert in lieu thereof the word "first," and in line 6 strike out the word "November," being the House amendment, and also the word "September," as found in the act as it passed the Senate, and insert in lieu thereof the word "October," and in the same line strike out the word "last" and leave the word "first," as found in the act as it passed the Senate.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment in line 7, page 3, section 3, and agree to the same, and that the Senate also recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House in lines 9, 12, and 13, page 3, section 3, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House in lines 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, page 3, of section 3, and agree to the same.

4. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments to section 4, in line 25, page 3, and line 1, page 4, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments to said section in lines 4, 5, and 6, page 4, and the House recede from its amendment thereto, and that both Houses agree upon new amendments in said lines as follows: Strike out the word "third" in line 4, being the House amendment, and the word "second" as found in the original act, and insert in lieu thereof the word "first;" and strike out the word "January," being the House amendment in said line, and the word "April," as found in the original act, and insert in lieu thereof the word "December." In line 5 strike out the words "last," "in October," and "first," and insert in lieu of the word "last" the word "first," and in lieu of the words "in October" the words "of April," as proposed by the House; and in line 6 strike out the word "third," being the proposed House amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the word "second;" and in the same line strike out "September," being the House amendment, and leave the word "February," as found in the act as it passed the Senate.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments in lines 8 and 9, page 4, section 4, and agree to the same.

5. That both Houses agree to new amendments in section 5 as follows: In line 14, after the word "Buffalo," insert the words "at least two weeks;" and in line 15, after the word "August," insert the words "unless the business is sooner disposed of."

6. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment to section 6 and that the House recede from its amendment, and that both Houses agree to a new amendment which amends the House amendment, and which amendment will read as follows: "That the clerk of the circuit court for the northern district of New York in office at the time this act takes effect shall continue to be clerk of the circuit court of the northern district as constituted by this act until his successor shall have been appointed and qualified; and said clerk of said circuit court or his successor shall likewise be clerk of the district court of that district until a clerk of said district court shall be appointed and qualified."

7. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments to section 7, and that the House recede from its amendments thereto, and that both Houses agree to a new amendment to said section 7 as follows: Strike out all of said section after the figure "7" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the present clerk of the district court for the northern district of New York as heretofore constituted shall be the clerk of the district court of the western district of New York as hereby constituted until his successor is appointed and qualified. He shall also be the clerk of the circuit court in the said western district hereby constituted until a clerk of said circuit court is duly appointed and qualified."

8. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments to section 8, page 5, and agree to the same.

9. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments to section 8, page 5, in lines 15 to 19, inclusive, and also in lines 24 and 25, same page, and agree to the same with further amendments as follows: In line 21, page 5, after the word "York," insert "as heretofore constituted;" and in line 22, after the word "act," insert "and who reside therein as hereby constituted," and that both Houses agree to such new amendments.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendments to section 9, on page 6, and that the House recede from its proposed amendments, and that both Houses agree to a new amendment to said section as follows: Strike out all of said section 9 after the word "compensation," found in line 1, page 6, and insert, after the word "compensation," the words "as heretofore." And also insert the following: "All officers not residing in said northern district as hereby constituted shall cease to be officers of said northern district when their successors, respectively, for the northern district as hereby constituted are duly appointed and qualified. The office of marshal and district attorney in each of said districts, deputy marshals and assistant district attorneys, and all other officers authorized by law and made necessary by the creation of said western district and the provisions of this act, and all vacancies created thereby in either of said districts, shall be filled in the manner provided by existing law. The salaries, pay, fees, and allowances of the judges, district attorneys, marshals, and other officers in said districts, until changed under the provisions of existing law, shall be the same, respectively, as now fixed for such officers in the northern district of New York."

10. That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment inserting a new section to be known as section 10, and agree to the same when said House amendment is amended as follows: In line 5, page 7, strike out the word "herein" and insert the word "hereby;" and in line 13, page 7, strike out the word "now" and insert the word "heretofore;" and also in line 14, page 7, strike out the comma after the word "part," and also strike out the words "or which have been so far proceeded with as to be ready for argument and submission" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Before the district judge of the northern district of New York as heretofore constituted, or taken in whole or in part and submitted to and passed upon by the said district judge;" and also further amend said amendment by adding thereto, after the word "act" in line 18, page 7, the following: "And provided further, That nothing in the preceding proviso contained shall be held to retain or keep in said northern district, as constituted by this act, any criminal proceeding or prosecution for the reason that questions as to the validity of the indictment have been raised and disposed of by the judge of said district."

S. W. T. LANHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

A. O. BACON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement of the House conferees, as follows:

Statement to accompany conference report on the act S. 268, entitled "An act to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the northern district of New York, to divide the same into two districts, and provide for the terms of court to be held therein and the officers thereof and the disposition of pending causes."

The effect of the report of the conferees is as follows: The amendments to section 1 simply provide that the northern and western districts, which border upon the Great Lakes and the River St. Lawrence, shall include the counties named with the waters thereof. The amendments to section 2 as agreed upon so amends the House amendment as to give the powers conferred by existing law to the district judge and also confer upon said district judge jurisdiction over the business and proceedings arising in and transferred to the western district, and strikes out the provision of the House amendment compelling the judge to keep his chambers in the city of Buffalo. Such a provision might be held to prohibit his holding chambers at any other place.

The amendments to section 3 fix the times for holding courts in said district in accordance with the wishes of the profession and the judges. The same is true of the amendments to section 4.

The new amendment to section 5 provides that regular sessions of the district court in the western district shall be held at least two weeks each month in the city of Buffalo, unless the business is sooner disposed of. This is necessary, because of the great amount of admiralty business arising at that point.

The amendment to the House amendment to section 6 makes it clear that the present clerks are continued in office in their respective districts until their successors are appointed and qualified. The same is the effect of the new amendment proposed to section 7. As these sections stood there was danger that the act continued these clerks in office for life. The amendments to section 8 make it certain that prosecutions for crimes shall be had in the district in which committed.

The amendments to section 9 continue in office with the same pay they now receive the present officers of the northern district of New York, where they reside in that district, and provides for the appointment in the manner prescribed by law of officers to fill vacancies created by the provisions of the act in both districts. As the act stood with House amendments, it was proposed by act of Congress to make the district attorney and the marshal of the present northern district, who happen to reside in what will be the western district, the marshal and district attorney of the western district. This can not be done by act of Congress, as under the Constitution those officers must be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The amendment as agreed upon also provides that the officers continued in office and the new officers appointed shall receive the same pay and allowances now given by law to the officers of the northern district of New York until the same shall be changed under the provisions of existing law. This is necessary for the reason that they would be without pay or allowance until the Attorney-General should take action, and he may require some little time to determine what is just and equitable in that regard.

The proposed amendments to the new section 10 are to make clear what districts are referred to and are intended to clearly define the business that is transferred to the western district.

No substantial change is made, but the purpose is to leave for final disposition in the northern district of New York as constituted by the act all business where the evidence has been taken in whole or in part before the present district judge of the northern district of New York, and who is to be the district judge of the new northern district, or in which the evidence has been taken in whole or in part and submitted to and passed upon by the said district judge.

GEO. W. RAY,
D. S. ALEXANDER,
S. W. T. LANHAM,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The question being taken, the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10538) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. BATE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 7599. An act granting an increase of pension to John F. Crawford; and

H. R. 7945. An act to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across Rainey Lake River."

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8962. An act to authorize the New Orleans and Northwestern Railway Company, its successors and assigns, to build and maintain a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, in the State of Louisiana;

H. J. Res. 168. For change in location of aids to navigation on Simmons Reef and Lansing Shoal, in Lake Michigan;

H. R. 8585. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent forest fires on the public domain," approved February 24, 1897;

H. R. 10097. An act to authorize the Atlantic and Gulf Short Line Railroad Company to build, construct, and maintain railway bridges across the Ocmulgee and Oconee rivers within the boundary lines of Irwin, Wilcox, Telfair, and Montgomery counties, in the State of Georgia; and

H. R. 2331. An act granting an increase of pension to Festus Dickman.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 222. An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9884) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read. It provides that the Cooper Pontoon Bridge Company, of Walsh County, State of North Dakota, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of North Dakota, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a pontoon bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River of the North between the State of Minnesota and the State of North Dakota, extending from a point on said river where the section line running east and west between sections 8 and 17, township 157 north, of range 50 west, in Marshall County, State of Minnesota, intersects said river, to a point opposite in the State of North Dakota. Said bridge shall be constructed so as to provide for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, animals, and foot passengers, and for road travel, for such reasonable rates of toll and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by said corporation and approved from time to time by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SPALDING, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER, INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3018) for the appointment of an additional United States commissioner in the northern judicial district of the Indian Territory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the judge of the United States court in the Indian Territory presiding in the northern judicial district thereof is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint an additional United States commissioner within said district, who shall be permanently located at Wewoka, in the Seminole Nation, and to prescribe by metes and bounds the portion of the district for which such commissioner is appointed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to ask the gentleman if that bill is reported by the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. LITTLE. It is.

Mr. PAYNE. What reason is there for the appointment of a new commissioner, and how much expense does it entail?

Mr. LITTLE. The commissioner is allowed a salary of $1,500 a year, and the fees collected by him are turned into the United States Treasury.

The particular necessity for this bill is this: The northern division of the Indian Territory embraces three tribes of Indians, the Creeks, Cherokees, and Seminoles. The Seminoles are a nation who have never given the Government any trouble. They have met the wishes of the Government as to treaties and allotments and all that sort of thing, but they have no commissioner. This bill was urged not only by the gentlemen known as the Dawes Commission, but Governor Brown, of the Seminole Nation, was before the committee in person and earnestly urged it, saying that they needed a local court which performs the functions of a justice court in a State.

The bill has the unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee of the House as well as of the Senate, and is recommended by the Department of Justice and by the judges of the Indian Territory. The fact is, it has the approval of all persons who are concerned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LITTLE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ARMS AND EQUIPMENT FOR THE MILITIA.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9510) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress approved February 12, 1887, entitled "An act to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of Congress approved February 12, 1887, entitled "An act to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia," be, and the same is hereby, amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"That the sum of $2,000,000 is hereby annually appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of providing arms, ordnance stores, quartermaster stores, and camp equipage for issue to the militia."

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Militia, was read:

In line 9 strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have an amendment read which I propose to offer, with the consent of the House. I ask that it may be read for the benefit of the chairman of the Committee on the Militia. It is fair to say that the gentleman asked me for a copy of the amendment, and I should have given it to him.

Mr. MARSH. I have no objection to the gentleman's proposed amendment being read, but I do not accept the amendment, nor will I permit him to offer it as an amendment.

Mr. STEELE. Then I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Indiana.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE LUMBER RIVER, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5056) to authorize the Carolina Northern Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Lumber River in or near the town of Lumberton, Robeson County, N. C.

The bill was read. It provides that the Carolina Northern Railroad Company, a corporation created and existing under an act of the general assembly of North Carolina, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a railroad bridge for the passage of railway engines and cars across the Lumber River at such point as may be selected by such company and approved by the Secretary of War within the boundary lines of Robeson County, N. C., in or near the town of Lumberton; said bridge to be so constructed as not to obstruct the navigation of said river and to be provided with a suitable draw; provided that any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure and shall be known and recognized as a post route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post route; and the United States shall have the right of way for a postal telegraph across said bridge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

An amendment recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BELLAMY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT PIERRE, S. DAK.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9559) to provide for the construction of a bridge by the Duluth, Pierre and Black Hills Railroad Company across the Missouri River at Pierre, S. Dak.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read. It provides that the Duluth, Pierre and Black Hills Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized under the general incorporation laws of the State of South Dakota, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to construct and maintain a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Pierre, Hughes County, S. Dak., and also to lay on and over said bridge a railway track or tracks for the passage of railway trains; and said corporation may construct and maintain ways for wagons, carriages, and foot passengers, charging and receiving such reasonable tolls therefor as may be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Sundry amendments, recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, were read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONCHO COUNTY, TEX.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8369) to transfer the county of Concho from the western district of Texas to the northern district of Texas, and for other purposes.

The bill as proposed to be amended by the Committee on the Judiciary was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Concho, in the State of Texas, is hereby detached from the western and attached to the northern judicial district of the State of Texas.

SEC. 2. That all offenses heretofore committed in said county of Concho of which the district court of said western judicial district has jurisdiction and upon which proceedings have been taken shall be tried and prosecuted in said western judicial district. Civil suits and proceedings now pending in the circuit or district courts in said State shall not be affected by this act.

SEC. 3. That hereafter all process issued against defendants residing in said county of Concho shall be returned to San Angelo, Tex. All offenses committed in said county in which proceedings have not been begun shall be prosecuted in said northern district.

SEC. 4. That all laws and parts of laws so far as in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary, substituting the above for the original bill, was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to detach the county of Concho from the western district of Texas and attach the same to the northern district of Texas, and for other purposes."

Mr. LANHAM. I desire to amend the amendment to the title by inserting after the word "western" the word "judicial;" and also after the word "northern" to insert the word "judicial." That will make the title conform to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to detach the county of Concho from the western judicial district of Texas and attach the same to the northern judicial district of Texas, and for other purposes."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment to the title as amended was agreed to.

CONDEMNED GUNS.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 6876.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6876) providing for the transfer to Post 39, Grand Army of the Republic, of certain guns now in possession of Battery C, Massachusetts Volunteer Militia.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, under such conditions as he may see fit, to transfer to Post 39, Grand Army of the Republic, at Lawrence, Mass., four 3-inch muzzle-loading steel guns, with limbers, now in possession of Battery C, Massachusetts Volunteer Militia.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "steel" and insert the word "field;" and in the same line, after the word "with," insert the words "carriages and."

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman if these are condemned cannons that they are transferring?

Mr. KNOX. They are obsolete guns. The battery has been supplied recently with new steel modern guns.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment to the title. The word "Saint" is there. I do not know how it got in, but the word should not be there.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "Saint," before the word "Lawrence."

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. KNOX, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF ISOLATED AND DISCONNECTED TRACTS OF OSAGE TRUST LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10152.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10152) to provide for the sale of isolated and disconnected tracts or parcels of the Osage trust and diminished reserve lands in the State of Kansas.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be duly proclaimed and offered at public auction, in the manner prescribed for the offering of public lands, all isolated or disconnected tracts or parcels of lands of one quarter section or less of the Osage trust and diminished reserve lands within the State of Kansas for which no application has been filed under the provisions of existing laws in relation thereto, but not more than one-quarter section shall be sold to any one purchaser under the provisions of this act. Such lands shall be offered for sale by advertisement for not less than thirty days in two newspapers in the proper land district, and by posting in the proper local land office for the same period, and upon the day named in such notice shall be sold for cash to the highest bidder at not less than the price fixed by law: Provided, That any settler upon any of said lands shall be permitted, at any time prior to the sale of the particular tract claimed by him, to file his application and submit proof therefor in accordance with existing laws. If any of said lands remain unsold after the offering as aforesaid, they shall be subject to private entry, for cash, in tracts not exceeding one-quarter section by one purchaser.

SEC. 2. That any such tracts or parcels of land that may become isolated or disconnected by the disposal of surrounding lands, after the offering provided for in the preceding section of this act, shall be subject to disposal under the provisions of section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act of February 26, 1895, except that it shall not be necessary that said lands shall have been subject to homestead entry for three years prior to such sale.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if this bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. LONG. It has.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has it the indorsement of the Commissioner of the Land Office?

Mr. LONG. It has.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I could not catch all the objects and purposes of the bill. I would like the gentleman to make some explanation of its details.

Mr. LACEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will suggest that the bill reported is a substitute bill, prepared by the Commissioner, to cover these little tracts of land left in that reservation. The original bill was the bill H. R. 5558, which was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, and he reported back favorably a substitute, which was subsequently introduced by the direction of the committee, and it is that substitute that the gentleman from Kansas now calls up.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Where are the lands located?

Mr. CURTIS. In the State of Kansas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LONG, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FORT SMITH AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. SHELDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 7740.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to hear some explanation of this bill, reserving the right to object.

Mr. SHELDEN. I will ask that the Clerk read the report. It is unanimously reported by the committee and recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

The report (by Mr. SHELDEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred House bill 7740, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

This is a bill enacting that the original bill be so amended as to provide that in lieu of the provisions in the original act "that a map showing the entire line of the road in the Indian Territory shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior before the construction of the same shall be commenced," the Secretary of the Interior may approve the first map of 80 miles, in order that construction thereon may commence at once; and provides further that all subsequent approvals of maps may be approved, as provided by the general law, in sections of 25 miles each. The bill further provides authority to construct bridges over the Poteau and the two forks of the Canadian River, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and further provides—

"That said railway company can change its located line after the approval of its map by the Secretary of the Interior in such cases where the topography of the country, in the opinion of the president of the railway company, justifies such change; but such change of line shall not vary more than 5 miles in either direction from the location shown on the map so approved, and an additional map showing such change shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior before the construction of that portion of the road shall be commenced, and thereupon shall have the same force and effect as if originally filed with and approved by him."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHELDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in line 10, page 2, by striking out the words "the whole."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHELDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Was there not a special order set for 1 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. Two o'clock.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The RECORD shows 1.

TERM OF UNITED STATES COURT AT WINSTON, N. C.

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 8815.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8815) to amend chapter 4, Title XIII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 4, Title XIII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, second edition, 1878, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting the words "and at Winston, N. C., on the second Monday in July and January," so that the paragraph in section 572, relating to the regular terms of the district courts for the western district of the State of North Carolina, shall read as follows: "In the western district of North Carolina, at Greensboro, on the first Monday of April and October; at Statesville, on the third Monday of April and October; at Asheville, on the first Monday of May and November, and at Winston, N. C., on the second Monday in July and January."

SEC. 2. That upon the board of commissioners of the county of Forsyth filing with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States an agreement allowing the said circuit and district courts of the United States to be held in the court-house of Forsyth County, in the city of Winston, with rooms for offices for the marshal and clerks of said courts, without any rent or other cost to the United States, this act shall take effect and be in force.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Page 2, at the end of line 2, insert the following:

"Provided, That the establishment of the court at Winston shall not affect or interfere with the holding of the courts as now established by law at other places in the western district of North Carolina: Provided further, That the clerk of the court at Greensboro shall be the clerk of the court at Winston."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would like, with the permission of the gentleman from North Carolina, my colleague, who is, I believe, entitled to the floor, to make a short statement in regard to this pending bill.

Mr. LINNEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. KITCHIN. This is a matter over which there was some conflict, and delegations from two towns, one from the town of Winston and the other from Greensboro, appeared before the Committee on the Judiciary in regard to this bill. In fact, they appeared twice, once last session and once this. The proposition at the last session was to remove the court from Greensboro, and this year it is only to establish a court at Winston. This amendment which has been added to the bill by the committee I think meets the approval of the committees that represented both towns; but I want to ask my colleague if he has considered the matter of the court at Charlotte, N. C.? I am not sure but that this bill ought to be further amended by adding the term of the court at Charlotte, N. C., on the second Mondays of June and December. I say I am not sure whether it is necessary to insert it here, but merely ask if the gentleman considered that?

Mr. LINNEY. I have considered that, and I think the amendment fully covers that matter. The amendment makes it certain that it does not interfere with any other courts in the district, either with the times or places of holding the courts. The only effect of this bill is to give another term of court, locating it at Winston, N. C. It does not interfere with the court at Greensboro, in which my friend is interested. It does not interfere with the holding of the other courts in the other places in the district as now provided by law. If the gentleman thinks that it does, and he so desires it, I have no objection to his offering an amendment.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not desire to offer any further amendment. I noticed that the other courts in the district are enumerated in the bill, and desired to call attention to the omission of the court at Charlotte.

Mr. LINNEY. Yes; but the amendment provides that this shall not interfere with the holding of courts at other places and times as now provided by law.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LINNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7844) providing for the revision and codification of the permanent and general laws of the United States, with an amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the commissioners heretofore appointed in pursuance of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," approved June 4, 1897, to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States be, and they are hereby, directed to revise and codify, in accordance with the terms and provisions of said act and the acts supplementary thereto, all laws of the United States of a permanent and general nature in force at the time when the same shall be reported.

SEC. 2. That in performing this duty the said commissioners shall bring together all statutes and parts of statutes relating to the same subjects, shall omit redundant and obsolete enactments, and shall make such alterations as may be necessary to reconcile the contradictions, supply the omissions, and amend the imperfections of the original text; and they may propose and embody in such revision changes in the substance of existing law, but all such changes shall be clearly set forth in an accompanying report, which shall briefly explain the reasons for the same.

SEC. 3. That the said commissioners shall arrange such revision under titles, chapters, and sections, or other suitable divisions and subdivisions, with head notes briefly expressive of the matter contained in such division, and with marginal notes so drawn as to point to the contents of the text, and with references to the original text from which each section is compiled, and to the decisions of the courts of the United States explaining or construing the same, and also such decisions of the State courts as they may deem expedient; and they shall provide by an index for an easy reference to every portion of such revision.

SEC. 4. That when the commissioners have completed such revision in accordance herewith, they shall cause a copy of the same, in print, to be submitted to Congress, that the statutes so revised and codified may be reenacted if Congress shall so determine.

With the following amendment recommended by the committee:

Strike out the words, in lines 17 and 18, page 2, "and also to such decisions of the State courts as they may deem expedient."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not mean to object, but the amendment, as I caught it, strikes out of the bill the decisions of the State courts.

Mr. WARNER. The bill as originally drawn required the commissioner to annotate the decisions of the State courts as well as the Federal courts. We struck out the State courts as being unnecessary.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think you did right. Now, one other question. This work is to be done by the commissioners who are doing the work of codifying the criminal statutes?

Mr. WARNER. The same commission appointed under the act of 1897 to codify the criminal and penal laws.

Mr. BARTLETT. The work is to be reported to Congress and action to be taken by Congress whether the result as reported by this commission shall be the law or not?

Mr. WARNER. Whether it shall be the new Revised Statutes. This commission, appointed under the act of 1897, was to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States. By a subsequent act they are to codify all laws relating to the organization, jurisdiction, and practice of the courts of the United States. Now, in the revision and codification of the penal laws they have to go over the civil laws to find penal provisions. For instance, in the internal-revenue act it will recite three or four sections and then say that anyone guilty of a violation of these sections shall be punished so and so. If you have a separate revision, they will have to take in a good deal of the civil law. Then they go on and make a second revision of the law, and it will only be a short time before the civil laws will have to be revised and codified, and that would make three distinct and separate revisions of the laws of the United States. It is better to have one all in one revision, as it was in 1873. It can be done without any expense to the Government whatever except printing, and the expense of printing of one revision would be less than the printing of two separate revisions.

The last revision we had only comes up to March 3, 1873. It has been twenty-seven years since we had a revision. There are a lot of laws on the books that are obsolete, adapted to conditions that have long since passed away, and some that are conflicting and redundant.

Now, in 1877, Mr. Boutwell was authorized and required to get up a second edition of the Revised Statutes, and he did that, and it is known as the revision of 1878. Since that time we have had nothing but a supplement, a supplement that brings the session laws down to 1891. It is not a revision but simply a compilation of the laws passed at each session, and from that time until now we have nothing but session laws. It is the session supplement and not a codification of the laws. Now, if a layman or a lawyer wants to look up the law, he is obliged to consult the supplement to 1891, and after that down only the session laws.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not mean to object to the consideration of this bill nor to vote against the bill. I think it is a step in the right direction. Any legislation looking toward the codification or revision of the laws is proper legislation, and I stand ready to vote for it. I have practiced for some years in the Federal courts, and I know the difficulty that exists in ascertaining what really are the laws of the United States, both criminal and civil. I did not rise for the purpose of objecting to the bill; I do not propose to vote against it. I simply desired to know whether such things were provided for, and especially to know whether this compilation will require action of Congress adopting it before it becomes the law of the United States.

Mr. WARNER. The bill provides that the compilation shall be submitted to Congress, to be adopted if it sees fit.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to know how nearly this commission has gotten through the penal and criminal divisions of the work?

Mr. WARNER. I can not tell.

Mr. RAY of New York. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to make a statement? I was waited on very early in the present session by gentlemen of the commission having charge of this revision, and subsequently I was requested to call at their office. I went there. They told me that they had completed the revision so far as it related to the courts and officers, and were just entering upon the work of codifying the criminal and penal statutes. They said frankly, "In our judgment, if we are to go on with this work as we are required to do by existing law, we are wasting time and wasting the money of the United States."

They illustrated their remarks in this way: If you take the Revised Statutes you will find sometimes 3, 4, 5, or 6 pages embracing various sections, in a dozen of which, perhaps, there will be some requirement of action. Then you will find a section saying "Any person or persons offending against the provisions of any section of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished," etc. "Now," they said, "in our revision we have no power to change the language, no power to cut down or leave out anything; we are required simply to pick out these penal statutes, to put them together, and then report them to Congress to be reenacted." This, they said, would require a reenactment of about half or possibly two-thirds of the present Revised Statutes. "Now," they asked, "do you think that Congress would ever enact such a revision into law?" Of course I said, "No." It is ridiculous to think that Congress ever would do it if the revision were put in that form—simply a repetition of the present statutes.

What they want to do in going on with their work is to revise and codify the Revised Statutes so as to put the provisions in proper shape. I think that the bill reported from this committee—I have consulted with my friend from Illinois [Mr. WARNER] about it—is the most sensible, and, indeed, the only sensible, course to be pursued. As I understand, the proposition is to have this work done by the commission of revision already organized.

Mr. WARNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAY of New York. I can say, after careful study of the question and after consultation with the members of the commission, that I believe the passage of this bill will accomplish a saving of time and money to the United States.

Mr. BARTLETT. I agree thoroughly with what the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] has just stated in regard to the saving of time and money which this bill may be expected to accomplish. I would myself vote for a measure to codify the laws of the United States in the same manner that the laws of various States of the Union have been codified. Most of the States have a code of law and practice, and I see no reason why there should not be a similar code for the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it contemplated here to include the penal and the civil statutes in the same revision?

Mr. RAY of New York. It is proposed to have them all in one volume——

Mr. WARNER. The same as in the revision of 1878.

Mr. RAY of New York. And to bring the work down to the present date.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will these commissioners have authority to change the language of any of the statutes?

Mr. WARNER. No; they will be authorized to suggest changes and report them to Congress with the reasons therefor; and Congress will decide whether such changes shall be made or not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then we shall have to reenact the whole compilation?

Mr. WARNER. Yes, sir; just as was done with the first revision of our laws in 1873 and the second in 1878.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think that is correct.

Mr. RAY of New York. At present, if we want to ascertain what the law is on a given subject, we must first look to the Revised Statutes, edition of 1878, and then at the successive volumes of the Statutes at Large from 1878 down to the present time—a period of more than twenty years; in other words, we must consult more than twenty different volumes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In making such a search to ascertain what the law is we are frequently without chart or compass.

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; absolutely at sea. It is time something should be done in the direction proposed by this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. How long a time does the chairman of the committee think will be occupied by the commissioners in making this compilation or revision?

Mr. WARNER. I think they will do very well if they have the work ready to be submitted to the next Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think so, too.

Mr. WARNER. They think they can get through within two years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to add one other suggestion. At present there is much general legislation mixed up with the appropriations in our appropriation bills. That is an additional reason for passing this bill.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS BACK BAY, BILOXI, MISS.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10310) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Back Bay at Biloxi, Miss.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read. It provides that the mayor and board of aldermen of the town of Biloxi, in the State of Mississippi, and their successors and assigns, be, and hereby are, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the bay, commonly known as the Back Bay, at or near the town of Biloxi, Miss., between the said town of Biloxi, situated on the south side of said bay, to a point on the north side of said bay, said bridge to start at or near what is known as the old ferry point, on the south shore of said bay.

Sundry amendments recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McLAIN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 985) providing that those who have heretofore commuted entries or have not perfected title to tracts entered as homesteads may avail themselves of the provisions of the homestead laws.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who has heretofore made entry under the homestead laws and commuted same under provisions of section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and the amendments thereto shall be entitled to the benefits of the homestead laws, as though such former entry had not been made, except that commutation under the provisions of section 2301 of the Revised Statutes shall not be allowed of an entry made under this section of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DAHLE of Wisconsin. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to get some information on this bill and to understand exactly the effect of it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS, IOWA.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2537) to create the central division of the southern district of Iowa for judicial purposes and to fix the time and place for holding court therein.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Lucas, Clarke, Union, Adair, Adams, Montgomery, Fremont, Page, Taylor, Ringgold, Decatur, Wayne, and Appanoose shall constitute the central division of the southern judicial district of Iowa; and a term of a circuit and district court for said district shall be held in said division hereby created at Creston, in Union County, on the third Monday of May and the fourth Monday of September of each year, each of said terms to continue so long as necessary to dispose of the business at any time pending in said court.

SEC. 2. That all civil suits which shall hereafter be brought against a defendant or defendants who reside in said central division of said district shall be brought in said central division; but if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions of said district, such suit may be brought in either division of said district in which any defendant or defendants reside; and all mesne and final process subject to the provisions of this act issued in either of the divisions of the central district of Iowa may be served and executed in either or all of the divisions.

SEC. 3. That all crimes and offenses against the laws of the United States hereafter committed within the counties comprising the central division of said district shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined at the terms of the circuit and district courts herein provided for.

SEC. 4. That the clerks of the circuit and district courts for said southern district and the marshal of said district shall each appoint a deputy, who shall reside and maintain an office at Creston, in Union County, each of whom, in the absence of the clerk and marshal, shall exercise all of the powers and perform all of the duties of his principal within the division for which he shall be appointed: Provided, That the appointment of such deputy shall be approved by the court for which they shall be respectively appointed, and they may be removed by such court at pleasure; and the clerk and marshal shall be responsible for the official acts and neglects of all their deputies.

SEC. 5. That all the grand jurors and all jurors for the trial of civil and criminal causes in the division hereby created shall be selected from citizens residing in the division created by this act.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary, were read:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the word "Montgomery."

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "central" and insert in lieu thereof the word "southern."

Page 1, line 11, at the end of the line insert the following:

"Provided, however, That suitable rooms and accommodations are furnished for the holding of said courts free of expense to the Government of the United States."

In sections 2 and 3 strike out the word "central" wherever it appears and insert in lieu thereof the word "southern."

Page 2, line 9, strike out the word "hereafter."

"Provided, however, That all prosecutions begun and pending at the taking effect of this act shall be proceeded with and finally determined as if this act had not passed."

Page 2, line 13, strike out the word "clerks" and insert in lieu thereof the word "clerk."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the bill and have only heard it as it was read at the desk. Does it provide for the appointment of a new judge?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, it does not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman please make some explanation of it, so that we can understand it?

Mr. HEPBURN. It is simply the authorization of another division of the southern district of Iowa. It provides for no new offices except a deputy clerk and deputy marshal. It creates no additional expense. It provides that rentals and expenses of that kind shall involve no charge upon the United States, and it is simply an attempt to bring the court to the people instead of carrying the people to the court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the title was amended so as to read:

A bill to create the southern division of the southern district of Iowa for judicial purposes, and to fix the time and place for holding court therein.

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON LOUISIANA CENTENNIAL.

Mr. JOY. I ask present consideration of a privileged resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri presents a privileged report, which will be read to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Special Committee on the Centennial of the Louisiana Purchase is hereby authorized to appoint a clerk to said committee for the remaining portion of the sessions of the present Congress, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, at the rate of $6 per day.

The resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS SNAKE RIVER AT NOME CITY, ALASKA.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2869) authorizing the Cape Nome Transportation, Bridge, and Development Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Washington and authorized to do business in the Territory of Alaska, to construct a traffic bridge across the Snake River at Nome City, in the Territory of Alaska.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read. It provides that the Cape Nome Transportation, Bridge, and Development Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Washington and authorized to do business in the Territory of Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to construct, operate, and maintain a general traffic bridge across the Snake River, to be located at such point within or near the corporate limits of the city of Nome, in said Territory of Alaska, as shall be approved by the Secretary of War; provided that said bridge shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, and the draw shall be opened promptly, upon reasonable signal, for the passage of boats; and, whatever kind of bridge is constructed, the owners thereof shall maintain thereon, at their own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals as the Light-House Board shall prescribe; that such bridge shall be constructed so as to provide for the passage of vehicles and pedestrians, upon the payment of a reasonable compensation for such use.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to ask the gentleman if this bill has been reported by one of the committees of the House?

Mr. JONES of Washington. This bill has passed the Senate unanimously and has been unanimously reported by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it unanimously reported by that committee of the House after investigation and examination?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ANDREW GEDDES.

Mr. JETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 41) to authorize the President to place Andrew Geddes on the retired list with the rank of captain.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to revoke his order of December 3, 1880, confirming the sentence of dismissal in the case of Capt. Andrew Geddes, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, and to disapprove the sentence and to revoke and set aside General Court-Martial Orders No. 64, Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, December 4, 1880, approving the pending sentence in the said case and ordering his dismissal to take effect December 31, 1880, and to order and cause to be issued to said Geddes an honorable discharge as of date December 31, 1880, and to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said Geddes a captain of infantry in the United States Army, and place him upon the retired list with the rank of captain, the retired list being increased for that purpose only: Provided, That no pay, compensation, or allowance shall accrue by reason of this act for any cause prior to its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I object.

Mr. COX. I should like to ask the gentleman if that bill does not promote this man to the position of captain and then put him on the retired list before he reaches the age required by law?

Mr. JETT. I will say to my colleague that I suppose it does put him on the retired list before he reaches the age required by law. It removes the penalty of court-martial proceedings, the findings of which I think were most unjust. The bill passed the Senate in the Fifty-fifth Congress, and was reported favorably by the House Committee on Military Affairs in that Congress. It passed the Senate again in this Congress, and has been favorably reported by the House Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. What was the court-martial for?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Kansas.

GALLANTRY IN REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution 51, recognizing the gallantry of Frank H. Newcomb, commanding the revenue cutter Hudson; of his officers and men; also retiring Capt. Daniel B. Hodgsdon, of the Revenue-Cutter Service, for efficient and meritorious services in command of the cutter Hugh McCulloch at Manila.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the thanks of Congress be, and are hereby, extended to First Lieut. Frank H. Newcomb, of the Revenue-Cutter Service, commanding the revenue cutter Hudson, his officers, and the men of his command, for their intrepid and heroic gallantry in the action at Cardenas, Cuba, on the 11th day of May, 1898, when the Hudson rescued the U. S. naval torpedo boat Winslow in the face of a most galling fire from the enemy's guns, the Winslow being disabled, her captain wounded, her only other officer and half her crew killed. The commander of the Hudson kept his vessel in the very center of the hottest fire of the action, although in constant danger of going ashore on account of the shallow water, until finally he got a line made fast to the Winslow and towed that vessel out of range of the enemy's guns. In commemoration of this signal act of heroism it is hereby enacted that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to cause to be prepared and to present to First Lieut. Frank H. Newcomb, Revenue-Cutter Service, a gold medal, and to each of his officers a silver medal, and to each member of his crew a bronze medal.

That in recognition of the efficient and meritorious services of Capt. Daniel B. Hodgsdon, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, while in command of the U. S. revenue cutter Hugh McCulloch, under the orders and in cooperation with the fleet commanded by Rear-Admiral George Dewey, United States Navy, at the battle of Manila, on May 1, 1898 (the said officer being now in the sixty third year of his age, and having served continuously for thirty-seven years as an officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service), he be placed on the permanent waiting orders or retired list of the Revenue-Cutter Service on the duty pay of his grade.

That the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the medals above specified.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CORLISS. Before the question is propounded I desire to state that I wish to eliminate the provisions that are objectionable—the thanks of Congress—by an amendment, and I am sure that there will be no objection then.

The SPEAKER. That will come up after unanimous consent is given.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask, before unanimous consent is given, what the bill does after you strike out that part of it?

Mr. CORLISS. It simply recognizes the gallantry by giving the crew of Captain Newcomb certain medals, and puts Captain Hodgsdon on the retired list, he having served thirty-odd years in the Revenue-Cutter Service. It is recommended not only by the Navy Department, but by a special communication from the President of the United States to Congress. And I have in my hand a special letter from Admiral Dewey speaking of Captain Hodgsdon's service. This is simply extending a recognition, with the amendment I propose to offer, of gallantry at a time when the country recognized their service.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then do I understand you to say that this bill does not retire an officer?

Mr. CORLISS. It puts Captain Hodgsdon on the retired list.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Is he not a revenue officer?

Mr. CORLISS. He is in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. McCLELLAN. There is no retired list for the Revenue-Cutter Service, and this creates a retired list for his benefit.

Mr. CORLISS. It places him on waiting orders. He is impaired in health; it has been recommended by the President of the United States, and I have in my possession here a letter from Admiral Dewey calling special attention to his services in the harbor of Manila, and asking Congress to pass a bill placing him on the retired list, and I trust there will be no objection to that recognition.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of men who might be recognized by giving medals to those who served gallantly in the recent war and won distinction at the fight at Manila and in the war that is now going on in the Philippines. Let us pass a law to meet all of those. I think it is unfair to single out one or two men in the service and give him or them a medal in recognition of services when there are numbers of others who occupy the same position. It makes a retired list also, and puts a man on the retired list when there is no law for the retirement for an officer in that service.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that for men in the Regular Army there are provisions for the recognition of such gallantry by the President.

Mr. CORLISS. In the Revenue-Cutter Service there is no such power to extend this recognition for gallant services. There was no man in the Spanish war who served his country more bravely than the men mentioned here; and so peculiarly gallant was it that the President and the Secretary of War have communicated to Congress twice upon this subject, and particularly asked this recognition, and I hope the Congress of the United States will not deny to men proving themselves so brave and heroic as they did on these occasions the little honor of receiving a medal at the hands of Congress, and the retirement of a Revenue-Cutter Service officer who would be entitled to be retired and could be retired if in the Regular Army service.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CORLISS. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am not going to object to giving these officers and men the medals. They no doubt have earned them, and probably others have earned them just as much and ought to have them. It is not necessary for me to specify, but I could specify a number of men, who are on the records of the Army and Navy, who gave valiant service as officers and men.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If the gentleman will permit me a suggestion, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan, it would seem to suggest the passage of a general law.

Mr. CORLISS. I have no objection to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But you call up these special cases.

Mr. CORLISS. We have already passed some bills recognizing some special acts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. We could pass some general law like the law which enables the President and the Department to give medals in recognition of services rendered during the civil war.

Mr. CORLISS. These are of such a character, so well known in our country, the service and name of Captain Hodgsdon and the service of Captain Newcomb upon the vessels named, the Winslow, the Hudson, and the McCulloch, the boat that Captain Hodgsdon was in charge of in Manila Bay, are household words, their deeds are known to our people, and I submit the recognition of this House of their gallantry ought to be granted unanimously. I have eliminated the only objectionable feature, I think. Are you willing to deny that any recognition shall be given to these men? I trust not.

Mr. MADDOX. Is not this a new departure?

Mr. CORLISS. Not at all. We have repeatedly granted men such recognition.

Mr. MADDOX. Does not this set a precedent not established heretofore?

Mr. CORLISS. I will say to my friend from Georgia that I have been on the committee three terms of Congress, and we have repeatedly passed measures like this.

Mr. MADDOX. For the revenue service?

Mr. CORLISS. Yes; for the recognition of gallantry.

Mr. MADDOX. Oh!

Mr. CORLISS. And extending medals. That is right. And there is a general law authorizing the Secretary of War and the President to grant medals in certain cases, and the House has made it general.

Mr. MADDOX. Well, what I want to get at is this: You want to make this exception and allow the Secretary of War and the President to grant this recognition to an officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service?

Mr. CORLISS. The great service of these men justifies this recognition.

Mr. MADDOX. That is exactly what I am driving at. You are opening another class.

Mr. CORLISS. We have repeatedly done so within the history of our country.

Mr. MADDOX. What committee reported this bill?

Mr. CORLISS. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and it has passed the Senate.

Mr. MADDOX. The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House reported it?

Mr. CORLISS. Unanimously, and I have repeatedly asked for its consideration since the bill was reported.

Mr. COX. How does the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce get hold of the question?

Mr. CORLISS. It passed the Senate, came to the House, and was referred to the committee which has charge of the revenue-cutter matters. I have a letter from Admiral Dewey, dated April 7, this very month, appealing to me to pass this measure, and in his closing remarks he says:

> I had occasion to report on his excellent services while in command of the McCulloch while in the squadron under my command at the Philippines, and I think he should have the reward for his long and faithful services to the Government. If my indorsement will be of any service to you, you are at liberty to use my name.
> GEORGE DEWEY.

That was written on the 7th of April. I did not ask for the communication or suggest it to Admiral Dewey, but I did ask unanimous consent of the House for this recognition, and it was denied. I never could understand why it was denied.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration?

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman one question. So far as the retirement is concerned, is not this a new question?

Mr. CORLISS. Not at all.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not new with reference to officers of the Revenue Cutter?

Mr. CORLISS. It places him on waiting orders.

Mr. SIMS. Are they not retired on pay?

Mr. CORLISS. No; simply put on waiting orders.

Mr. SIMS. Will not this retire this officer on pay?

Mr. CORLISS. No; it simply places him on waiting orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend, in lines 3 and 4, on page 1, by striking out the following words: "the thanks of Congress be, and are hereby, extended to" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "in recognition of the gallantry of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was read the third time.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Does not the title of the bill extend the thanks of Congress to these officers and men?

Mr. CORLISS. It does not. It recognizes the gallantry of the men. The title does not say anything about the thanks of Congress.

The joint resolution was passed.

On motion of Mr. CORLISS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PHEBE S. RILEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5970) granting a pension to Phebe S. Riley, with the following Senate amendment:

> In line 9 strike out "fifteen" and insert "twelve."

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. EDMONDS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4335) granting a pension to William H. Edmonds, with the following Senate amendment:

> Line 9, strike out "fourteen" and insert "twelve."

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

EZRA A. BENNETT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 4267, with the following Senate amendments:

> Line 3, after "and," insert "he;" line 6, strike out "C" and insert "E."

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

MARY M'CARTHY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 856, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mary McCarthy," with the following Senate amendment:

> Line 6, before "mother," insert "dependent."

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ARTICLE VII—TREATY WITH SPAIN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls attention of the House to the fact that 2 o'clock was set apart as a special order to consider Senate bill 2799, to carry into effect the stipulations of Article VII of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN (interrupting the reading). I ask unanimous consent that the first or formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. RAY of New York. I object.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. RAY of New York (again interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I do not know but the time might be better used in the discussion of this bill than in reading it. I think the attention of members has already been called to the vicious character of the bill; and I will therefore, if in order, withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa, that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Of course the House understands that if the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, it will immediately be taken up and read by sections.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? The Chair hears none. The Clerk will now proceed to read the bill by sections, unless general debate is desired. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] desire to be recognized for general debate?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not think general debate is necessary. During the reading of the bill by sections we can discuss the provisions of the bill as we go along.

Mr. RAY of New York. I do not propose that this bill shall go through without any general discussion. I desire to oppose the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire now to make any observations in the way of general debate, or does he reserve his time?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will reserve my time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] rise to oppose the bill?

Mr. RAY of New York. I do.

Mr. MAHON. This bill, as I understand, is on the Union Calendar and should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAUGEN. As I understand, the bill was made a special order for this time, to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That is correct. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] desire to oppose the bill?

Mr. RAY of New York. That is my purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman in charge of the bill reserves his time. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, only a short time—a few minutes since—was my attention called to this bill. It proposes to constitute a new court or commission, to consist of three persons—in the language of the bill, "three suitable persons learned in the law, who shall constitute a commission," etc. They are to receive each the sum of $5,000 per annum; and then we are to have another assistant attorney-general, who is also to receive the sum of $5,000 per annum; and then we are to have a clerk, who is to receive $3,500 per annum; and then we are to have a number of assistant district attorneys—I have forgotten how many——

A MEMBER. The number is unlimited.

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; I think the number is unlimited. That is my recollection. We are to have an unlimited number of assistant district attorneys, who are to be employed at the rate of $200 a month each for the time of actual employment. Of course when these officers are once appointed they will be employed without intermission. We need not be concerned about that. Also one or more—the number is unlimited—commissioners to take evidence, at an annual salary of $5,000; and then we are to have messengers and stenographers and typewriters at salaries of $1,200 per annum.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should not object to the compensation to the messengers, the stenographers, and typewriters at the sum of $1,200 per annum if they were necessary, but there is no earthly necessity for the creation of this commission or the appointment of these assistant attorneys-general or the clerks or the assistant attorneys.

Now, what is the excuse or alleged excuse for this? In our treaty with Spain it was stipulated that—the United States and Spain mutually relinquish all claims for indemnity, national and individual, of either kind, of either Government, or of its citizens or subjects, against the other Government, that may have arisen since the beginning of the late insurrection in Cuba and prior to the exchange of ratifications of the present treaty, including all claims for indemnity for the cost of the war.

The article then declares that—the United States will adjudicate and settle the claims of its citizens against Spain relinquished in this article.

That is all there is of it. The United States is to adjudicate and settle the claims of its citizens against Spain relinquished by this article of the treaty. In other words, such claimants are to have no claim against Spain, but their claims are transferred against and assumed by the United States and are now claims against this Government.

Now, we have a Court of Claims already established. That court is composed of gentlemen learned in the law; they are not overworked; they are as fat and healthy-looking a set of gentlemen as I ever met, and they will not die of overwork nor become insane because of too much mental exertion if we give them jurisdiction of these claims. If they are not competent for the work, they had better be out and some one else appointed; but I think they are fit for it. I have every confidence in them.

We have now a large corps of assistant attorneys-general and an abundance of assistant district attorneys. They are paid well; they have an abundance of time to do this work.

Now, you say, of course, in reply to that, that the Senate would not have passed this bill had there not been necessity for it. There is, of course, necessity for having these claims adjudicated by a proper tribunal—we have assumed them and must pay them—but we have the proper tribunal already of sufficient ability. What is the necessity for all this addition of officials and all this expense? Is there a word in the report of the committee that points out any such necessity? Not at all. The President, of course, would have the appointment of all these gentlemen. The Senate would have the confirmation, and the Senators would have a chance to get some more of their hungry constituents into office. That, in my judgment, is the only excuse or justification that can be offered for the enactment of this bill into law. How many of these claims are there? Will this committee tell me? Does the gentleman know? If he does, let him tell the House now.

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not know the exact number, but there are a great many claims——

Mr. RAY of New York. How many have been presented?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will state for the information of the gentleman——

Mr. RAY of New York. Does the gentleman know? That is the question. If he does, then let him tell me how many.

Mr. HAUGEN. I may state for the benefit of the gentleman that before the Committee on War Claims to-day we have bills running up into the hundreds and thousands, bills that have been pending before this Congress for the last thirty or forty years. These people have been knocking at the doors of Congress; their claims are meritorious, and I see no reason why this Government should not pay its debts.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, I have not yielded to the gentleman for a speech.

Mr. HAUGEN. The sooner these debts are paid the better. A commission appointed for this purpose can better determine what these claims are and what their merits are than the courts to which the gentleman has referred can.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, the inadvisability of this bill is demonstrated by the answer of the gentleman who has it in charge. I asked him how many claims assumed by the United States under this treaty had been presented, and his answer is that we have hundreds and thousands of them that have been pending here for the last thirty years.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. RAY of New York. In just a moment. Let me finish this idea. This whole question arises over claims that were assumed by the Government of the United States under the treaty of 1898, and the gentleman demonstrates almost perfectly that he does not know what he is talking about and that he does not understand the principles involved in this bill when he talks about hundreds and thousands of these claims that have been pending here for thirty years. Why, they can not have been pending for over two years. We did not assume them until the treaty of peace.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly; but I have promised to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON]. Let me yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania first.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman misunderstood your question, probably.

Mr. RAY of New York. Then will you tell me?

Mr. MAHON. These claims are filed in the State Department, under the treaty with Spain, and none of them are filed with the committee.

Mr. RAY of New York. How many of them are on file at the State Department?

Mr. MAHON. I do not know. They are filed in the State Department and the committee have no knowledge of them.

Mr. RAY of New York. Are you able to say that there are ten of them?

Mr. MAHON. I do not know anything about it. They are in the State Department.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman says he does not know anything about it, and yet a bill is brought in here to create a commission, with a dozen or more new officers, with large salaries, to dispose of business and claims made against this Government, when the committee does not know there is any necessity for it.

Mr. MAHON. Let me say to the gentleman——

Mr. RAY of New York. Can you assure me that there is one?

Mr. MAHON. I do not want you to mislead the House, and I will not permit you to do it if I am here.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well——

Mr. MAHON. These claims are filed in the State Department and not in the War Claims Committee, under the treaty with Spain. They are filed with the Secretary of State, under the treaty of Paris. The Department wants this bill or some bill for the adjudication of these claims, under the treaty with Spain. The War Claims Committee have no jurisdiction over the matter.

Mr. RAY of New York. I did not yield to have you tell me what any Department wanted or wants.

Mr. MAHON. Well, I know, but there are a good many things that the gentleman does not know.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to know whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows that there is a single claim now on file with the Secretary of State?

Mr. MAHON. Oh, yes; I know there are claims there, but I do not know, and the gentleman does not know, how many there are or what they amount to. There are a great many things that the gentleman does not know in regard to this matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAY of New York. I thank the gentleman. Now, does the gentleman from Pennsylvania know how many claims are pending at the State Department?

Mr. MAHON. No, sir; and you do not, either.

Mr. RAY of New York. Have you made any inquiry?

Mr. MAHON. No, sir; and I do not intend to.

Mr. RAY of New York. Can you tell me why you do not?

Mr. MAHON. Because it is not my business. It is the business of this House to provide a remedy——

Mr. RAY of New York. A remedy for what? To create a commission for what?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; just as this Government has done during its existence a dozen times.

Mr. RAY of New York. Create a commission—a new court?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. RAY of New York. With a dozen new officers, drawing salaries all the way from $1,200 a year up to $5,000 a year, with no limitation upon it, to do what? Adjudicate claims!

Mr. MAHON. Now, if the gentleman——

Mr. RAY of New York. To adjudicate what claims? "I don't know." Are you sure that any are on file there? "I think there are some." Have you made any inquiry to know? "We have not."

Mr. KING. And he says they do not intend to.

Mr. RAY of New York. Is any information given this House as to whether there is one or a dozen or a hundred? "No; but we bring in our bill here to create this court with these officers and these big salaries, without any knowledge that there is any necessity for it."

Is there any secret about these claims? I desire to say that if I were going to bring such a bill as this before the House, if it were suggested to the Committee on the Judiciary that we report such a bill, the very first step I would take would be to send a communication to the Secretary of State inquiring how many claims of this character, if any, have been made, how much, if anything, was involved, and ascertain first whether there is any necessity for an additional court, and if satisfied of that, then recommend the legislation.

Mr. MAHON. Will you allow me to interrupt you there?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; if you will not say again that I do not know anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHON. Now, a number of claims have been filed, how many or by whom I do not know, but the Secretary of State and the President of the United States have recommended the passage of a bill of this kind, in order that they can be adjudicated.

Mr. RAY of New York. Where are their recommendations?

Mr. HAUGEN. Here is the recommendation of the President of the United States, and I will read it.

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me read it.

I have the honor to recommend that appropriate legislation——

Mr. MAHON. That is what we are trying to do.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is what the President recommends—"appropriate" and not "inappropriate and unnecessary legislation." [Applause.]

I would recommend appropriate legislation in order to carry into execution Article VII of the treaty of peace with Spain, by which the United States assured the payment of certain claims for indemnity of its citizens against Spain.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the President is a good man and an honest and able man. If he had said in the message that it was necessary to have three commissioners, at $5,000 a year; to have an unlimited number of assistant district attorneys and commissioners, a lot of typewriters, clerks, and stenographers, and to hold a new court to take care of these claims, I would have taken some stock in the bill; but he does not state any such thing or intimate any such thing. Now, what do we have? Already we have a Court of Claims. What is it for? To listen to and adjudicate claims made by citizens of this Government against the Government. What are these claims mentioned in the message of the President, mentioned in the treaty? Simply claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of the United States, precisely the same class of claims that already go to the Court of Claims——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If I understand these claims, they are of the same nature as the claims that are called the French spoliation claims, and are assumed now by the Government of the United States, or the Government pledges itself under this seventh article of the treaty with Spain to adjudicate or settle them in some way. I would like to ask the gentleman how he thinks claimants should have their remedy—in what way? I am in sympathy with the gentleman in opposition to commissions; but if these claims are not adjudicated now, while they are fresh, and are permitted to run as the old French spoliation claims have been, does not the gentleman think it likely they will grow in the coming years, and that in fifty years from this time they will be larger than now? That has been the history of the French spoliation claims.

Mr. RAY of New York. We are always exposed to the danger that claims will grow.

Mr. RICHARDSON. For that reason I think they ought to have a forum in which they can be speedily adjudicated.

Mr. RAY of New York (continuing). And there is sometimes opportunity afforded for them to grow; but I do not know that it necessarily follows that the courts of the United States should grow and keep pace with them. I do not think that it follows, because here are claims against the Government of the number we are uninformed, of the amount involved we are uninformed, that we are to constitute a new and costly tribunal with all the machinery of a court for the purpose of settling and adjudicating them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman being a great lawyer, I wanted him to suggest some forum in which they could be adjudicated speedily. That was my object in the matter.

Mr. RAY of New York. Why can they not be speedily adjudicated in the Court of Claims?

Mr. HITT. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to one fact?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. HITT. Because I see he is in pursuit of truth. As a matter of fact, claims generate claims; they propagate each other. It has been found that these claims against foreign governments are the most rapidly multiplied of any, and all the devices to cut off the claims industry have been found inefficient except to have commissions, with a provision such as this:

All claims shall be filed as aforesaid within six months from the date of the first meeting of the commission, and every claim not filed within such time shall be forever barred.

I remember well the claims against Mexico about twenty years ago which were being filed in the State Department; and after a time it appeared that it was a manufacturing business, that it was an extensive industry for a class of the legal profession. At last, when the Mexican commission was organized, the claims presented amounted to several hundred millions of dollars. They were investigated and the awards were not 3 per cent of the claims; and of the awards one of the largest, the Weil claim, was sheer invention, pure villainy, as was found out afterwards; and another very large one, the La Abra, was also bad.

Mr. DALZELL rose.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, all I care to do is to reserve some of my time.

Mr. HITT. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not want to take up his time.

Mr. DALZELL. Let me ask my friend from Illinois would not the difficulty he suggests be remedied by putting into a bill conferring upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to adjudicate these claims the provision which he read—that all such claims should be filed within six months or be forever barred?

Mr. HITT. With the consent of the gentleman from New York, I will answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I would like to have that proposition considered by his committee. I know the gentleman from Pennsylvania is himself a distinguished lawyer, and his seems to me a reasonable suggestion.

Mr. RAY of New York. Why, Mr. Speaker, can it be that this bill to create a new court, with a large number of officers with large salaries, is necessary in order to put up the bar of the statute of limitations against these claims? To my mind, that suggestion has no weight or force whatever. We can confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims; we can provide, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has suggested, that they must all be presented within one, two, or three years, and if not presented they shall be forever barred.

But I want to call the attention of this House to another fact in this same connection. How futile is the adoption of a statute of limitations. During my twelve years' service in this House—and I started in on the Committee on Claims—we have been continually considering bills to remove the bar of statute of limitations and extending the time when claims might be presented. It is only a few weeks ago that I had the audacity to stand here in opposition to one of the committees of this House and oppose a measure where, thirty-five years after the accruing of the alleged claim, amounting to over a million, it was proposed to remove the bar of the statute of limitations. You can not get rid of claims in any such way as this, by the creation of a new court.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the gentleman, know the condition of the docket of the Court of Claims, whether it is crowded or not?

Mr. RAY of New York. I presume there are enough claims on that docket, but you allow these claims to be presented to that court and put them on the docket and put up the bar of the statute of limitations and the court will get through them quick enough. They always get to these claims quickly when the lawyers and the litigants come and ask to be heard. There is no trouble about that.

Now, I want to call attention to section 8 of this bill. We should have a merry old time with the Treasury of the United States, I think, under the provisions of this bill.

SEC. 8. That all reports, affidavits, records, proceedings, and other documents now on file or of record in the Department of State, or in any other Department, or certified copies thereof, relating to any claims prosecuted before the said commission under this act shall be furnished to the commission upon its order, made of its own motion or at the request of the claimant or of the attorney representing the United States before said commission, and shall be given such weight as evidence as the said commission shall think just; but the commission is authorized to require other evidence, and the claimants and the United States are authorized to introduce other evidence in support of or in opposition to any claim.

Why, Mr. Speaker, do such rules as that apply in any State court? Do any such rules of evidence apply in any of the courts of the United States? What do you think of it? That would let in everything; they would not be required to bring the originals.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. I want to suggest to the gentleman that I have on my table a substitute which eliminates all these objectionable features.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, I am glad to hear that. That demonstrates the unwisdom of this whole proposition. Here is this bill before the House, set as a special order for to-day, and now up for consideration. It creates these new offices, which will cost this Government thousands upon thousands of dollars. Now, the moment some man rises on the floor of this House to oppose the original measure, up rises my genial and jovial and learned friend from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the committee that reports this bill, and says, "I have a substitute for it which I am going to offer." What is the substitute? What are its provisions? What is the character of it? What do we know about it? What do I know about it? What will any gentleman of this House know about it when he comes to vote upon it? Is that the way we should legislate when we create new courts, costing the Government thousands of dollars each year—courts that may adjudicate claims running into the millions? Or should such proposed legislation be considered carefully and then brought forward and sustained by facts?

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I am quite in harmony with what the gentleman, as I understand, is suggesting—the propriety in a well-considered bill of referring all these claims to the Court of Claims, under proper limitations. But I want to call his attention, in the first place, to line 12, page 1, and the top of page 2, where I find it provided that this commission "shall adjudicate certain claims according to the merits of the several cases, the principles of equity, and of international law." Now, I do not know what that language means. I understand what "the merits of the several cases" may be, and "the principles of international law." But the phrase "the principles of equity" I do not understand, as used here, although the general term "principles of equity," as known to the profession of the law, is not unfamiliar to me.

I do not see how equity jurisprudence could in any way apply to this class of claims. If words "the principles of equity" mean according to the discretion of somebody as to what he conceives to be right or wrong, in the popular sense, I do not know that I am in favor of that limitation. It may be that it is right; but if the gentleman or some one else can not say what that first limitation means, it seems to me there ought to be further investigation and report. That is one matter to which I call the gentleman's attention; and when my inquiry is met on that point, I would be glad afterwards to have his opinion about one or two other matters.

Mr. RAY of New York. I would be glad to have the gentleman call my attention to any points which he considers deserving of comment, because I certainly have had no time to study this proposition. It was brought to my attention only a short time before the bill came up.

The gentlemen has called my attention to the provision beginning at the bottom of page 1, providing that this commiss on "shall adjudicate certain claims according to the merits of the several cases, the principles of equity and of international law." In connection with that I turn to page 5, the section I have already read, containing this language:

> That all reports, affidavits, records, proceedings and other documents now on file or of record in the Department of State or in any other Department, or certified copies thereof, relating to any claim prosecuted before the said commission under this act, shall be furnished to the commission upon its order, etc., and shall be given such weight as evidence as the said commission shall think just.

Here is a provision conferring jurisdiction upon three men to take a lot of evidence as to the justice of claims in the form of affidavits or certified copies, and then, guessing at the merits of the claims, without any cross-examination, without any means provided for getting at the truth of the matter, give judgment against the United States.

Of course the principles of equity jurisprudence are pretty well understood; that is, that the court—I will not go into a lengthy explanation—that the court, when it comes to consider a case brought in equity, may do about what it thinks is right, restrained, of course, by certain defined rules in regard to that particular case.

Mr. CANNON. I do not understand that to be the definition of equity.

Mr. RAY of New York. Nor do I; but in a given case, where the court has jurisdiction to administer equity under certain limitations and rules, it has practically the power to do about what it thinks is right. The only limitation upon the power of the court in such a case is that if its discretion in the administration of equity is abused, some higher court may set its action aside. But if the court acting in the first instance has any ground to stand upon, and does not violate any established rule of law, its action becomes effective and operative.

Mr. CANNON. Then it seems to me that the words "principles of equity" ought to be stricken out, because they are very loose when used in this connection. The gentleman admits that what we understand ordinarily by equity jurisprudence could in no way apply to this class of claims.

Mr. RAY of New York. It probably should not.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me those words might well be stricken out.

Now, this bill appropriates $50,000 a year as a permanent appropriation for this service. I must confess in a general way, upon a hasty reading of this bill, that the gentleman's remarks would indicate the propriety of a committal of the bill to the law committee of the House. In other words, it would appear that we should let this matter be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, who, after full consideration, should report a bill for the action of the House.

Mr. RAY of New York. I yield a moment to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has suggested that the words "the principles of equity" should be stricken out. It seems to me that a very great injustice would be done by striking out those words. It is to be remembered that the claimants in this class of cases have no claim against the United States; their claim is against Spain. Yet the Government of the United States, by the seventh article of the treaty of Paris, has assumed perhaps responsibility for these claims, but not to the claimant. It has done that in a general treaty. Now, if we strike out those words, "the principles of equity," and do not give the claimant such status in court as equity would give him under such circumstances, we offer him no remedy at all, because he has none at law against the United States.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, I should like to know why.

Mr. HEPBURN. Simply because the claims were claims against Spain, and are only claims against the United States now because of the seventh article of the treaty.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is new doctrine to me. Now, if they were legal claims against Spain, what has the Government of the United States done for a good and valuable consideration, having full power in the premises?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. RAY of New York. Wait a moment until I get through with this and I will.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he had concluded.

Mr. RAY of New York. The seventh article of the treaty with Spain says:

> The United States and Spain mutually relinquish all claims for indemnity, national and individual, of either kind, of either Government, or of its citizens or subjects, against the other Government, that may have arisen since the beginning of the late insurrection in Cuba and prior to the exchange of ratifications of the present treaty, including all claims for indemnity for the cost of the war. The United States will adjudicate and settle the claims of its citizens against Spain relinquished in this article.

Now, that in law and equity gives citizens who had any claim against Spain the same claim against the Government of the United States, and I am astonished to hear my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] make the assertion that he made. It shows the necessity for having this bill and the alleged necessity upon which it is based properly investigated and then a proper bill reported. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question upon the same point.

Mr. RAY of New York. You will first give me credit for not being thoroughly posted on this bill. I have had no time to study it. It came to my attention only a short time ago.

Mr. MANN. I understand the situation. It has occurred to me, however, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. That a case might very readily arise in which the principles of equity jurisprudence would have to be invoked.

Mr. MAHON. And the law of nations.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, do not understand me as saying that the rules of equity jurisprudence should not be applied in some cases.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY], in answer to the suggestion of my colleague from Illinois, to say that he thought those words ought to be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. I assented, perhaps.

Mr. MANN. Suppose a piece of property was mortgaged and in some way was destroyed, and the owner of the property had a claim against the Government under the treaty. Under the bill how would the mortgagee have any claim, unless you could invoke the principles of equity jurisprudence? It is the mortgagee in that case who wants to be protected. Would not that be the case?

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, not necessarily so. It might be.

Mr. MANN. I mean it might be the case.

Mr. RAY of New York. There might be cases where it would apply; not necessarily so.

Mr. MANN. So that it would be necessary to include this clause in the bill, would it not, in order to have a complete bill?

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, it might be.

Mr. MANN. Now, I want to direct the gentleman's attention to another point.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will give you the best answers I can.

Mr. MANN. With reference to the use of certified copies of documents in the State Department. I had supposed when I read that provision in the bill that it was done for the protection of the United States more particularly than for the benefit of the claimant, and that where the Government has collected testimony and has it on hand in the State Department or other Departments it might use it in defense.

Mr. RAY of New York. No.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is what the bill says.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. It says both parties, but it permits the Government to use that evidence in defense, which it could not do unless it was so provided in the bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. Very possibly.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman seems to be apprehensive that the Government of the United States, making a fight against a claim presented by a citizen, will find itself so poor that it will be unable to get evidence to met the evidence of the claimant, and will be driven to the necessity of using some papers on file. Now, the gentleman is perfectly familiar with the doctrine that if I bring suit in a court, whether of equity or of law, and bring witnesses or put in documents as evidence, the evidence being competent, the other party has the right, without any statute, to put in any pertinent document, signed by any witness or by the party, which tends to contradict the proof given by the other party. So far as that is concerned there is not the slightest necessity for that provision. It is not there for any such purpose. It is there for the purpose of allowing the claimant to make out his case againt the Government of the United States simply by presenting some affidavits taken ex parte, and if they do not happen to be contradicted then his case is proved.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. MARSH. The claims that are the subject-matter of this bill, as I understand, are claims on the part of citizens of the United States against the Kingdom of Spain?

Mr. RAY of New York. They were so originally.

Mr. MARSH. Which claims the United States has agreed to pay by virtue of the seventh article of the treaty of Paris?

Mr. RAY of New York. That is right.

Mr. MARSH. Now, in the adjudication of these claims and in the determination of their validity is there any other law that should be resorted to than international law and the law of Spain? In other words, if we had not put ourselves in this position of assuming these claims, they would be claims against Spain, and would depend upon international law and the law of Spain, and hence——

Mr. RAY of New York. That would seem to be correct.

Mr. MARSH. And hence, we having assumed the duty of paying these claims, it occurs to me that the only law under which they can be adjudicated and allowed is international law and the law of Spain in existence at the time when these claims originated.

Mr. RAY of New York. That would certainly seem to be true, for the reason that they were claims against the Government of Spain. Now, the legality or validity of those claims would necessarily have to be determined by the law of Spain.

Mr. MARSH. And international law——

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, where there was——

Mr. MARSH. Now, the law of equity, as understood in this country, might not apply.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is true.

Mr. MARSH. Consequently those words probably ought not to be in the bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, we having assumed the payment of the claims, that fact should not change the rules of evidence nor the principles applicable in their adjudication.

Mr. MARSH. As against Spain.

Mr. RAY of New York. The mode of procedure might vary, but the rules of law applicable to the determination of their validity or invalidity should remain the same, and therefore it would seem that this bill is prescribing a new ground of liability.

Mr. MARSH. Exactly.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is, it might. I do not say it would, but it might; and that matter ought to be thoroughly considered and deliberated upon.

Mr. GAINES. Will my friend permit an inquiry?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. In section 13, page 7, of the bill I find these words:

That either the claimant or the United States may appeal from any final decision of the commission allowing or rejecting any claim, where the amount in controversy is more than $5,000, to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia as are now provided by law for appeals to the said court of appeals from the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and as near as may be upon like conditions and limitations provided by law for appeals to said court of appeals.

Do you think that "more than $5,000" limitation is just or good policy?

Mr. RAY of New York. Why, no; and I do not know what the District of Columbia should have to do with it anyhow.

Mr. GAINES. It seems to me that a man who had a claim for $3,000 has just as much right of an appeal to a higher court as a man having "more than $5,000."

Mr. RAY of New York. That is another evidence of a loose bill. These are claims of citizens against the United States. Now, I feel that in creating a court or sending these claims to the Court of Claims, if an appeal is taken the appeal should be taken in the regular way and from courts already provided. Why put them into the court of appeals of the District of Columbia? Is it done so that claimants may get at this court, so that they will have one here that they can surround with influence?

Mr. POWERS. Where do appeals go from the Court of Claims?

Mr. RAY of New York. I think they go to the supreme court of the District of Columbia in the first instance. They certainly may go to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. POWERS. You can not take an appeal to that court unless the amount in controversy is $5,000.

Mr. RAY of New York. I think not.

Mr. POWERS. This is exactly like that.

Mr. RAY of New York. But the question the gentleman raises is this: If a man has a claim of $5,000, and it is adjudicated upon by this tribunal, that is an end of it. Does it say $5,000—$4,990? That is an end of it. But if he has got one for $10 more, he can go up on appeal.

Mr. POWERS. Is not that true also with any case of a similar character?

Mr. RAY of New York. I understand that is the rule that has been applied to many of our citizens, but the question of the gentleman from Tennessee was, What was the necessity or the propriety of applying any such rules to these claims? They are limited in number—must be.

Mr. GAINES. Will my friend allow me a moment to call his attention to the phraseology, "where the amount in controversy is more than $5,000" appeals can be had? It seems like that would be rather an invitation to inflate claims, make them to "more" than $5,000, to get the benefit of appeals to higher courts.

Mr. RAY of New York. They will not need any temptation to inflate them. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. I agree with you in that; but I am going on the idea that we have with us yet some honest people.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, how much more time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirteen minutes remaining of his time.

Mr. RAY of New York. I think I will reserve that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I will excuse the gentleman from New York. He has admitted that he has not read the bill. If he had read the bill I am certain he would be for the bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman is mistaken; I do not admit any such thing. I have read it twice.

Mr. HAUGEN. That was your statement made here a few minutes ago.

Mr. RAY of New York. I said I had not had time to study it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Now, Mr. Speaker, as to this bill; this measure was recommended in the annual message of the President. The bill was drawn by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Senate, who was a member of the Peace Commission at Paris, and it is possible that he had some knowledge of the law, and it is also possible that all knowledge of the law had not been absorbed by the gentleman from New York.

Now, it is a simple bill. It provides:

That the President of the United States shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, three suitable persons learned in the law, who shall constitute a commission, whose duty it shall be, and it shall have jurisdiction, to receive, examine, and adjudicate all claims of citizens of the United States against Spain, which the United States agreed to adjudicate and settle by the seventh article of the treaty concluded between the United States and Spain on the 10th day of December, A. D. 1898. It shall adjudicate said claims according to the merits of the several cases, the principles of equity, and of international law. One of said persons shall be designated by the terms of his appointment to be the president of said commission.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 2. That each of the members of said commission, the Assistant Attorney-General, the assistant attorneys, and the clerk provided for by this act shall be citizens of the United States, and shall take the oath of office prescribed by law to be taken by officers of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the said commission shall, within thirty days after the appointment of the members thereof, meet, and it shall thereafter hold its sessions in the city of Washington. * * *
